EASTER WINGS.

A shower of roses on a happy head From hands beloved: the winter day Grew sweet as summers fled. "And shall be aye,"

We said. How bright

Their bloom, how brief; Long had it passed from sight, When higher life woke 'neath one withered leaf, Spread golden wings and floated into light.

So Love is born. Joy is its rosy bower, In whose delight we say, "Ah, this Is Love's own perfect flower,

Its fullest bliss

And power!" But deep Lie precious things.

Earth fades, then open, heavenly wings: And this is Love, if Love be ours to keep. -Helen W Ludlow.

BY F. R. BURTON.

N' DID ver mamma never tell ve of that, Elsie, me darlin'? How the sun an' the moon dance together, the bot' of thim, on Easter mornin? Oh! oh! what a shame it is, it is! Might be she never heard of it, for there be a heap of innocint ignorance in America waitin' to be putt in the shtove an' burnt up like a pack o' peat, so it is. Fait', an' I tink the most beautiful tings is Irish, so an'

"But really, Maggie," and little Elsie's blue eyes were wide with wonderment, "really and truly, does the sun dance with the moon on Easter morning?"

"What would I be tellin' ye for if it wasn't so at all? They do in Ireland; just as sure as the blissid sun comes up drippin' out av the say, lavin' ould England in the dark, bad luck to her! The moon runs hoppity skip across the sky an' joins hand with the sun, an' they dance a rale Irish jig together."

"That must be dreadfully funny." said Elsie gravely; then, a last doubt lingering in her puzzled thoughts, "Did you ever see them, Maggie?"

"See thim, is it? Oh, oh! run away, now, to yer mamma an' shtop axing me bothersome questions. Don't I tell ye it's so? What more do ye want, I dunno?"

Elsie put her little finger in her mouth and walked slowly and with abstracted gaze into the sitting room where her mother sat sewing and her father was reading the evening paper. She sat down upon a low stool under the mantel and studied the brown and yellow figures of the carpet. In the soft light of the big lamp on the center table the brown seemed darker than it did by daylight, and the yellow was almost white. Elsie wondered vaguely whether the yellow moon would be white during the dance with the sun, for she remembered that whenever it appeared by day it was wofully pale; and would the sun turn his dazzling face aside for just one minute so that she could have a good look at him? and would the moon have feet? and would the sun's legs go right down from the great, hot circle of flame, or would there be a body like papa's? or would both, and this seemed more likely, would both just tilt from side to side and laugh in each other's face before they resumed their regular duties? It was strangely interesting to the eight-years-old, and in happy reflection she forgot all about the odd figures in the new carpet. The bronze clock above her head began to buzz with immense importance and then uttered a single tiny ring and went on ticking hurriedly, as if in haste to reach the next hour mark, when its buzzing should prelude a more significant announcement. All well regulated clocks are subject to this vanity; they puff out the cheeks of their faces, rattle away as if all their precious insides were falling to pieces; the pendulum is silent, and then the commotion ends with a few silvery strokes, more or less, after which the timepiece recovers its modest self possession and goes on about its useful business.

"Half past 8," said Mrs., Durant, glancing up at the clock. "Time little girls were in bed."

"Mamma," exclaimed Elsie, taking a tuck in her dress with her fingers and looking hard at her feet, "mayn't I sit up all night, just this once?"

"Mercy on us!" cried Mrs. Durant, laying her sewing down in her lap; "what does the child mean?"

Papa Durant looked inquiringly over the top of his paper.

"I want to see the sun and the moon dance together," replied Elsie, "and I can't wake up early enough if I go to bed."

"I WANT TO SEE THE SUN AND MOON DANCE."

Mamma Durant was too astonished to speak, but papa with an amused smile

"You would have your trouble for nothing. Elie; the sun and the moon don't insulge in such antics."

Elsie did not understand her father's words exactly, but she felt the denial and she responded:

"Maggie says they do every Easter morning, when the sun comes out of the sea, and the moon hop, skips and jumps, and they take hands and dance in the sky, at least in Ireland, the both of them, and perhaps, if I just sat up all night, they'd do it for me. Please, papa."

Papa laughed. "If you sat up, little one," he said, "you would not be awake in the afternoon to sing with the other children in the Easter fostival. You wouldn't like to miss that?"

"I think I'd rather see the dance," responded Elsie. "Maggie shouldn't put such notions in little girls' heads," said mamma, and forthwith Elsie was bundled off to bed. Her lips pouted with something more than affection when she kissed her father good night, and two or three lonesome tears rolled slowly down her face; but she went to her room without a murmur, and when her head was on the pillow she looked out at the stars and wished something would keep her awake. Her father had rearoused her doubts as to the entire truth of Maggie's story; but it would have taken much more than that to convince her, for the event was too interesting not to be believed, and she was more than willing to see for herself whether it was so.

As she lay wondering about it all a thought suddenly sprang into her head. Why should she not stay awake and see the dance? Papa and mamma had not said that she must not, and they would not care very much when she told them at breakfast what she had done. This thought became a fixed determination. and for several minutes she looked at the stars steadily with open eyes. Then she caught herself dozing and she sat up in bed. Even in this attitude her head speedily drooped, and she got out and stood in front of her half opened window. Across the road a street lamp made fantastic shadows of the trees and houses, and far away a dog barked. From the room below came the clear, high tones of her mother's voice and the deep, somber murmur of her father's replies. Mellow sounds from the top of the little hill back of the house told that
