The Gang in Chain: -Ashamed to See So Many Friends-The Irons (hiselled Off -One of the Toughs Leaps From a Moving Train-He Was Recaptured.

The sheriff of Algoma and a couple of officers reached the city yesterday afternoon with five blacklegs. A telegram to the chief of police called for assistance, and two offi- Smeaton's, returned home on Thursday. cers were sent to the lower depot to aid in taking the quintette to the penitentiary. The gang were marched from the city depot to the police station. That short trip was a - very distressing one for the felons. Among the party was J. Driscotl, a youth wellknown here. As he slunk along the streets with irons on his wrists he declared that he met more people he knew than he would have in a year when free. Another of the prisoners while in the station said, when he saw the crowd outside: "I would like to go through that crowd with a club in ny hand." A 'bus was secured and the parties were transferred to the penitentiary. Driscoll will serve for five years, Colla for four years, Neville, Doyle and O'Neill for three years each. At the penitentiary the bracelets and irons had to be chiselled off the arms of the convicts. The keys of the cuffs were in the possession of a constable who had left the train at Newcastle to pursue McKenna, one of the party, who had slipped his cuffs and jumped from the window. The smashing of the cuffs was a relief to a constable whose arm was locked in one half of the bracelets, the other cuff being about the wrist of the most desperate of the gang. The sheriff and his officers were very tired when Kingston was reached. They had been on the train for thirty-six hours, and during that time had to keep watching the prisoners. The sheriff also left four prisoners at Toronto for the Central prison. Charles McKenna, who escaped from the train, was recaptured near Newcastle. This morning he arrived at the police station in charge of Officer Stevenson. On being put in the cells he began to amuse himself by singing, and was in the middle of an interesting song when the Whic reporter met him. He is young, not more than twenty years of age, and has a bright and intelligent looking face. He is the son of ex-Chief of Police McKenna, of Brockville, and had been working at the Canada "Soo," in the lumber business. He claims that he was drawn into the robbery in a simple way by the other prisoners. He, held a couple of coats belonging to them while they rifled the pockets of Kinsella. McKenna says Kinsella was mistaken when he swore that a revolver was snapped at his ear while he was being robbed. This was not the case. Driscoll hal a revolver in his pocket but did not pull it out. Mck. nna admitted that he deserved the punishment he was about to receive-four years. Had he kept better company he would not have been sent to the prison. He contended, however, that the sentences were not fairly administered. The men who should have got the hardest sentence, and who put up the scheme to rob Kinsella, got the shortest terms. In telling of his escape from the train McKenna said he would not have been captured had there. been a bush near by where he could have concealed himself. He could have escaped would have been seen, by those who knew

Kinsella also met two friends, John Doyle and John Neville. Un April 3rd the trio called on Kinsella and invited him to spend an hour with them, some fine music being promised him. Talking about old times the quartette strolled outside the limits. Kinsella noticing where he was advised a return to the hotel. Just then he noticed three men approaching. When they came near O'Neill and Doyle divided and walked on either side and passed the three men; Nevilte, who was with Kinsella, fell back in the rear and his three friends were not seen afterwards. The strangers then surrounded Kinsella, and, helding revolvers to his head, ordered him to hold up his hands. Kinsella realized his position, and holding up one hand dealt a blow with the other to the biggest of the three men and be fell. The other two then laid hands on him, and with the assistance of the third, who had gained his feet, they notes, $2.50 in silver, and a gold watch and chain. They used him very roughly and deliberated among themselves whether or not they would kill him. The smallest of the three made the remark that it would "be better to knife him and then he won't squeal." One of them snapped his revolver while they had Kinsella down and the barrel was pressed against his ear, but luckily the revolver missed fire and the messenger of death did not go forth.

After they had left him Kinsella proceeded to the hotel, and was not long there before O'Neill and Doyle made their appearance. They feigned they were looking for an officer, and that they had nothing to do with the robbery, but they were told by Kinsella to sit down while a warrant was secured and they were promptly arrested. Charles McKenna and Coola, recognized by Kinsella, were arrested, and on the following day Constable Christner found $110, part of the stolen money, in the bed occupied by them. John Neville and Driscoll were arrested in a bagnio in the Michigan Sault, where they were having a carousal. On their persons were found $320 and Kinsella's gold watch and chain. After being advised by their lawyers, Driscoll and Neville crossed to Canadian territory, and the result of the trial was the conviction of the whole party.

O'Neill has a bad character. He served a term for burglarizing Beament's store in Ottawa, a term for purloining a $4,000 cheque from the department of public works at Ottawa. He was implicated in a $40,000 diamond robbery at Minneapolis some years ago, and for which he served a term, but was liberated before his time was up through the instrumentality of Sir Charles Tupper, a friend of the family.

KEENE AS "RICHELIEU."

An Admirable Representation Last Evening-The Audience a Small One. Last night, at Martin's opera house, was presented Bulwer J. tton's great five act play entitled "Richelieu." It is much to be regretted that the house was but a poor one, owing, no doubt, to the fact that the day was Good Friday, and lovers of the drama who absented themselves on this ground are to be congratulated on their self-mortifying zeal-that is if they had previous experience of T. H. Keene's dramatic capabilities. An explanation of the plot is unnecessary, the drama having become almost, if not,

In not one single instance did the superb acting of Mr. Keene as "Cardinal Richelieu," waver either when trembling with ferocity and intensity of purpose, or when melted to tenderness by his niece's presence, or when grappling with the cruel infirmities of old age, lose the same terrible impersonation of power, character, and humanity. Though "seeing daggers in men's eyes," the intrepidity of the old cardinal preserved its integrity, and well was that intrepidity represented by Keene. His loud, sardonic laugh over his baffled foes, terminating in a convulsive fit of senile coughing, was in each instance a masterpiece of acting. His triumph over Baradas and Clemont when cowed by fear of the anathema of the holy church, was realistic to a degree, but when at the conclusion of the fourth act, with a yell of "God save my country," he swoons, a storm of applause would have been elicited from the most dramatically cultured and experienced audi-For lack of space we have had to defer ence that ever sat before the curtain.

The support afforded to Keene was, we do not hesitate to say, more than fair. As the "Chevalier de Mauprat," George Learock' acting was gentlemanly and unconstrained, the same may be truthfully said of Arthur Elliott's "Count de Baradas," and from among the minor parts we would single out Eugene Moore, "Page to Richelieu," as deserving of approbation. Miss Emma V. Sheridan, as "Julia de Mortemar," ward to Richelieu, and Miss Tennie Ellison as "Marion de my Redeemer Liveth" from Handel's Mes-Lorine," a spy, were pleasing and devoid of "gush.

In some of the costumes and accessories there was room for improvement, anachronism not being conspicuous by its absence. For instance, the "officer of Richelieu's guard" should invest in a more antiquated "fire iron," than the one affected by him, and we would like to be informed why so many would be assassins of Richelieu rush. ed in and out attired in ladies' waterproofs?
