The Extravagant Dinner Consumed by One Man on a Wager.

Some few gentlemen happened to be dining a few weeks ago at the fashionable restaurant, the Cafe de Paris, and one of them asserted that it was impossible for a single person to eat a dinner that should cost 500 francs, and that he would pay for it if he (the eater) could. The Vicomte de Viel Castel accepted the challenge.

"But when I say one person," hestipulated, "I don't mean a plowman, but a gourmet, an epicure, myself; and when I say eat, of course it includes drink. Nothing is easier. I will dine, even here, at the Cafe de Paris, after drawing up my own bill of fare, and I will dispatch, without help, your 500 franc dinner."

"Leaving nothing in the plates and dishes?" "Yes; I shall leave the bones."

"But you won't breakfast that day!" "I shall breakfast as usual."

"Let it come off, then, to-morrow; here, at 7 in the evening."

The maitre d'hotel was summoned and consulted. It was the depth of winter; the vicomte wanted forced fruits and vegetables; the shooting season was over, he insisted on game. The maitre d'hotel's request for a week to prepare in was granted. The umpires were to dine at separate tables, to the right and left of the vicomte's table. He was allowed two hours to dine in, from 7 tx 9, and he might either talk or hold his tongue.

At the appointed day and hour the parties met and took their places. The bill of fare was still a mystery. The first things served were twelve dozen Ostend oysters and a half bottle of Johannisberg. The vicomte's appetite was sharp. He asked for twelve more dozen oysters and another half bottle of the same wine. Then came swallow's nest soup, which the vicomte poured into a basin and drank off at a draught, like a cup of tea.

"Ma foi, messieurs," he said. "I feel hungry today. Will you allow me to indulge a longing! I adore beefsteak and fried potatoes. That's an extra which I will pay for myself. Waiter, a bottle of Bordeaux, grand

The umpires stared at one another. The beefsteak and potatoes were brought and consumed to the very last scrap.

"And now for the fish! Messieurs, this is a ferrat from the Lake of Geneva, the only place where it is found. It arrived this morning alive, in the water of its native lake. The ferrat is a delicious fish; I advise you to try it. Waiter, another bottle of the same Bordeaux."

Five minutes afterward all that remained of the ferrat was the bones. Then came the truffled pheasant, which was demolished in about ten minutes more. Then the salmis or ragout of ortolans, ten in number, each of which made just one mouthful. Forced asparagus, green peas from Africa, strawberries and pineapple followed, with a half bottle of Constantia, and then coffee and liqueures, all of which were consumed to the last scrap and drop.

The umpires acknowledged that everything had been executed loyally and literally aboveboard. It only remained to call for the bill, Total, 548 francs, 50 centimes. A few only of the items need be cited: Swallow's nest soup, 150 francs; beefsteak and potatoes, 2 francs; ferrat from the Lake of Geneva, 40 francs; two bottles of Bordeaux, grand cru, 20 francs; strawberries, 20 francs.

The only comment that need be made is, that for the same sum o? money a plain but hearty meal might have been given to 500 hungry men, women and children.-American Analyst.

Mantell Does Not Imitate Dogs.

Mr. Robert Mantell had a rather unique experience during his recent engagement in Toronto. While at a midnight supper with his friends Mr. and Mrs. Bingham, of the hostelry known as the "Hub," the officers of the law suddenly made their appearance, having been informed that a coon and dog fight was in progress. After searching the place they found a pet coon and a dog and took them and a number of gentlemen into custody. The following morning Mr. Mantell appeared in the witness box, and after answering a number of questions the judge asked him:

"While you were up stairs did you hear a dog bark!"

"Yes, there was a little dog in the room and it was barking."

"How did it bark!" "Well, my imitations of men may be all right, but I have never tried to imitate dogs." Mr. Mantell was promptly excused.—New York Herald.

Recollections of Temple.

Sir William Temple is chiefly remembered as the early patron of Dean Swift. Macaulay also assisted somewhat in rescuing from oblivion the courtly adviser of Charles II and William III by his popular essay on Temple's life and career. Sir William was born in 1628 and was 71 years of age at the time of his death, on Jan. 27, 1699. His first public service of importance, the triple alliance with Sweden and Holland against France, raised his reputation as a diplomat to the highest point. This was done in 1668, but subsequently Temple became too prudent to accept office during the stormy times of Charles and James II, and awaited in agreeable retirement for the advent of a peaceful regime and the accession of the Prince of Orange to the throne. William III esteemed Temple an invaluable adviser, whom he frequently consulted on questions of foreign and domestic policy.-Philadelphia Times.

The Fatal Barrier.

"Miss Carmine," he pleaded, "the love I bear you cannot be measured by mere words. It is ineradicable, indistinguishable, infinite. Will you be mine?"

"Mr. Botts," replied Maria Carmine, "I feel deeply the great honor you have conferred upon me. But there is between us a fatal barrier. I can never marry a man who wears a silk hat and a sack coat at the same time."-Clothier and Furnisher.

The fact cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of all users of paint, that good results can be produced only by the use of good materials. The main expense in painting is not in the cost of the paint, but in the cost of LABOR and one, and it requires more labor and more oil to apply inferior paint than to apply the best that can be obtained.

MISCELLANY.

The First Case on the Island,

The first court ever held on Grindstone Island occurred on Tuesday, when S. H. Slate investigated a charge of assault and battery made by Mrs. Agnes Mills against Mrs. Elizabeth Brown. They are sisters-inlaw. On Monday the women met at the house of Mrs. John Harwood, when Mrs. Brown charged Mrs. Mills with making injurious statements concerning her. This Mrs. Mills denied. From words Mrs. Brown proceeded to more vigorous action, and threw Mrs. Mills to the ground, choking and jumping upon her, until pulled away by Mrs. McGeoch. Mrs. Mills was considerably injured about the throat and stomach. She appeared at court, but suffered so much that a doctor had to be called. Mr. Slate, after hearing the evidence, fined Mrs. Brown $30.

He Was Sick

Had a far away look in his eyes, predicted all sorts of evil, short crops, low prices, a new rebellion in the North-West. His skin was yellow, and a fever spot on each of his cheek told of a torpid fever and poisoned blood. A box of Hamilton's Mandrake and Butternut Pills worked a wonderful change, for through their stimulating action on the liver, all poisonous germs were removed from the true river of lifethe blood. Crop prospects were improved, prices were away up, and life at once became filled with new prospects and pleasures. Try Hamilton's Pills at druggists, and dealers in medicine.

Last week Mrs. Rielly, living between Portage-du-Fort and Haley's Station, started to visit her mother, Mrs. Shannahan. On her way she was overtaken by a tramp, who ordered her to deliver up her money or he would take her life. He commenced to search her pockets, finding therein some eggs and a flask of brandy and some other little delicacies. He took possession of the lot and then let her run off, screaming, and very much frightened. On the same evening tramps made an effort to break into the residence of James Patterson, west of Ren-
