

AYER & CO'S NOTICE

"Perfect Satisfaction,"

Is the verdict of every one using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and all Lung troubles. Unlike cod-liver oil, and many other specifics, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is agreeable to the taste and leaves no ill effects.

"I cannot say too much in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes Mr. Robert F. McKeen, of New Gretna, N. J. "I have used it in my family, many years, and always with perfect satisfaction."

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is truly the Most Popular Remedy of the age, rendering full satisfaction in every instance."—Thornton Edwards, Lonely Dale, Ind.

F. L. Morris, M. D., Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "Your medicines have been satisfactory to me throughout my practice; especially Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has been used in great quantities by my patients, one of whom says he knows it saved his life."

THE BISHOP OF NEW YORK.

HENRY CODMAN POTTER AND HIS MUCH TALKED OF SERMON.

He is of a Family of Bishops, and He Has a Way of Speaking His Mind Whenever He Likes—The Criticised Passages.

Bishop Henry Codman Potter, the "muscular Christian," who created such a sensation by his sermon before the president, cabinet and other dignitaries on April 30, is a scion of a progressive and aggressive family which has contributed not a little to the history of New York and the United States. His father and uncle were bishops, one brother is in a fair way to be, another was a brilliant soldier in the civil war, another a prominent congressman, and still another an architect and musical composer of note. The father, Bishop Alonzo Potter, was born in the Quaker church, but became an Episcopalian, a professor in Union college at 21, a clergyman at 24 and a bishop in middle life. While at Union college he married a talented daughter of the illustrious Dr. Elihu Chittenden, and their five sons inherited in large measure the talents of both parents and both lines. The father died in the harbor of San Francisco, July 4, 1865, having just arrived from a voyage around the Horn, entered upon in the hope of improving his health.

Of the sons each has shown himself singularly positive and determined in manifesting his faith, whether in politics or religion. The oldest, Clarkson Nott Potter, was the well known Democratic congressman from New York, who took so prominent a part in the discussions about reconstruction and the disputed electoral count of 1876-77. The second son, Robert B. Potter, entered the army as major of the Fifty-first New York volunteers and made a brilliant record, rising to the rank of major general, and receiving high compliments from Gen. Grant. The third son, Edward, is the architect and musical composer; the fifth, Elihu Chittenden Nott, is a prominent clergyman and president of Hobart college, having declined the Episcopal diocese of Nebraska, and the fourth son is the now much discussed bishop of New York city, having been consecrated to that office Oct. 20, 1883. He was born in Schenectady May 25, 1835, graduated from the Theological seminary of Virginia in 1857, and rose rapidly in the church, declining at one time to accept the bishopric of Nebraska. He is the author of "The Gates of the East"—an account of travels in Syria—and other works quite popular in his church.

Bishop Potter unites many qualities not often found in the same person—great love of physical activity and great devotion to study, an intense individuality and self-assertiveness with great reverence for authority and precedent whether in church or state. With all this there is a strong element of humor and a remarkable capacity for keen incisive statement. His head would indicate that he should be a believer in phrenology, for the experts in that theory would certainly give him a fine set of qualities—"Ideality," "Conscientiousness" and "Veneration" combining in a very rare degree. What the "bump" is which caused his recent utterances before the president the phrenologists must decide, but this is not the first time its presence has been manifested; for in his many addresses in 1887 and previously, calling for church action upon the relations of capital and labor, he repeatedly said: "The growth of wealth among us has not resulted in binding men together, but in driving them apart. The rich are further from the poor, the employer from his workmen, capital from labor, now than ever before. Too many know less and less how the poor live. The manners of the poor, it is said, are more insolent and ungracious than of old to the rich, and this naturally discourages efforts to know and serve them."

Very naturally his conclusion was, and is, that the solution must be furnished by the church, and lest the conclusion should not be drawn by all who heard him he took care to administer some severe slaps at socialism, "demagogism," "leveling theories" and the "Henry George land theories." Of all these he says: "Now, as never before, there is in the air a sentiment which teaches men to despise authority, to disdain restraint, to hate and resent all social and material inequality, but which with all its noisy clamorship of the poor touches none of their burdens with so much as the tips of its fingers."

The two passages in Bishop Potter's sermon of April 30 which are most severely criticised are these: "We have exchanged the Washingtonian dignity for the Jeffersonian simplicity, which was, in truth, only another name for the Jacksonian vulgarity, and what have we got in exchange for it? In the elder states and dynasties they had the trappings of royalty and the pomp and splendor of the king's person to fill men's hearts with loyalty. Well, we have dispensed with the old titular dignities. Let us take care that we do not part with that tremendous force for which they stood. If there be not titular royalty all the more need is there for personal royalty."

Then, proceeding to a rather pointed contrast between Washington and his successors, he said: "The conception of the national government as a huge machine, existing mainly for the purpose of rewarding partisan service—this was a conception so alien to the character and conduct of Washington and his associates that it seems grotesque even to speak of it. It would be interesting to imagine the first president of the United States confronted with some one who had ventured to approach him upon the basis of what is now commonly called 'practical politics.'"

Another enormous difference between this day and that of which it is the anniversary is to be seen in the enormous difference in the nature and influence of the forces that determine our national and political destiny. Then, ideas ruled the hour. Today, there are indeed ideas that rule our hour, but they must be merchantable ideas. The growth of wealth, the prevalence of luxury, the massing of large material forces which by their very existence are a standing menace to the freedom and integrity of the individual, the infinite swag of our American speech and manners, mistaking bigness for greatness and sadly confounding gain and godliness—all this is a contrast to the austere simplicity, the unpurchasable integrity of the first days and the first men of our republic, which makes it impossible to reproduce today either the temper or the conduct of our fathers."

Photographing a Snake Fight. Arthur Schlemmer, of Sanford, piloted a lady and gentleman out shooting. One of the events of the day was a snake fight, which the party witnessed, between a king snake and a moccasin. The king snake killed the moccasin in less than three minutes, and was in turn killed by the lady, who had photographed the combat with a portable instrument which she had in the buggy.—Savannah News.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Sir Morell Mackenzie's Remedy for Tonsillitis—A Novel Accident.

In a lecture at the Edinburgh Eye, Ear and Throat hospital on acute and chronic tonsillitis, Sir Morell Mackenzie lately expressed his preference for glaucum as a remedy at the outset. The glaucum is made into lozenges containing about three grains each. Nine cases out of ten rapidly recover when one of these lozenges is given every two hours at the commencement of the attack of tonsillitis. Sir Morell sometimes also applies locally a little bismuth and opium, or an eighth of a grain of morphia with a quarter of a grain of starch, because the problem is not only to cure the patient but to keep him comfortable until he is cured.

Sometimes the glaucum causes some diarrhoea, but this is rather an advantage, and the morphia usually soon checks it as well as allays the slight stinging sensation produced by the glaucum upon the throat. He uses this treatment in acute inflammations of any part of the back of the throat, and after an experience of fully twenty years pronounces it really specific.

Biting the Finger Nails.

A novel accident resulting from a habit of very common prevalence among nervous people, is described by Dr. J. Tutill, of Chicago. A young lady presented herself at my office, complaining of a constant irritation in her throat. Two weeks previously she had been taken with a severe "croup throat," which was treated by a neighboring physician. Under his care, she says, the inflammation quickly subsided, but there still remained a sensation of irritation. Examination revealed a small fleshy looking object, about the size of a kernel of wheat, adherent to the tissues posterior to the left tonsil, by one end.

The other parts of the throat were normal. The little mass could not be detached by a cotton covered probe, but by the use of forceps it was easily removed, and on examination proved to be a piece of finger nail, which had become covered by a cheesy deposit. A broken piece of the nail was also removed from under the mucous membrane at the same spot by a sharp pointed probe. The patient then confessed to the habit of biting her finger nails, and, moreover, could remember that a day or two previous to the onset of her throat trouble a piece of nail which she had bitten off had become lost in her mouth, but after it had caused a fit of coughing she had forgotten about it until reminded by my discovery.

The Best Time to Bathe.

The best time to bathe, according to London Lambert, is just before going to bed, as my danger of catching cold is thus avoided, and the complexion is improved by keeping warm for several hours after leaving the bath. A couple of pounds of bran put into a tin bag and then in the bath tub is excellent for softening the skin. It should be left to soak in a small quantity of water several hours before being used. The internal aids to a clear complexion are most of them well known. The old-fashioned remedy of sulphur and molasses is considered among the best. Charcoal powdered and taken with water is said to be excellent, but it is most difficult to take. A strictly vegetable and fruit diet is followed by many for one or two weeks.

Yolk of Egg Makes the Hair Grow.

Experience has convinced a Scientific American correspondent that it is best to keep all oils and grease from the hair. He says: "Don't let barbers cut it. I find wetting with water best. At least once a week rub the yolk of an egg, or half of it, well into the hair and scalp, and rinse off thoroughly with tepid water. It will promote growth and color, probably largely due to the sulphur in the egg. This course has started a new growth of hair with me, not very thick, but better than none at all."

Vocal Music and Sound Lungs.

A recent writer says that these nations which are given to the cultivation of vocal music are strong and vigorous, with broad, expansive chests. Vocal music is a good lung exercise; it increases expansion of the lung tissue; it calls into action the entire lung, thus making the apices less likely to develop organic disease.

An Agreeable Remedy.

For hoarseness or sore throat want a lemon slowly until it is thoroughly done, soft, but not broken. Cut a hole in the top while hot, fill it with granulated sugar and eat just before going to bed. The effect is to induce quiet perspiration and "cut" the tough mucus that alters the voice.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Some of the Sufferings of Shy People—How One May Become a Cool Veteran.

The English are said to be the shyest people in the world, and therefore, according to Mrs. Sherwood, they are described as the best lost in the world, being masters of the "letting alone" system. Thus the quest has the enviable privilege of spending the day as he pleases when at an English country house. He need not talk when he does not choose; he need not give his opinion of "Robert Esmeré"; he can be silent as to the merits of the "black man" question; he is not to use an old Yankee word, "pester"—a great boon to a shy man. No doubt this same shyness has been the secret of what has been called rudeness in great men. No doubt Napoleon suffered horribly from embarrassment in society.

There are certain parties which to a shy man are eternal. They never end. They are like the old-fashioned ideas of a state of torment; they grow momentarily hotter and more stifling. His feet become feet of clay, nothing to stand on, only good to stumble with. Hands are cold, trembling, useless. There is a disagreeable feeling in the back of the neck, and a spinning sensation in the brain. Perhaps the severest wound is inflicted by the pitying eyes of the woman who pities him most. He reads there the mirror of his miserable shyness. "And this humiliation, too!" he asks, as she offers to show him some photographs.

Women are seldom troubled with shyness at the age at which men suffer most. Perhaps that and the talent for writing letters and a fluency in talking are nature's compensations for making them the weaker vessel. Cruel are those women, and most to be reprobated, who laugh at a bashful man. It is the higher order of human beings whom bashfulness attacks. It is the precursor of many excellences, like the vigil of the knight, and if it is patiently and bravely borne the knight is thrice a hero. It is this recollection which can alone sustain the bashful man under his sufferings.

Very shy men have often become very attractive men of society. The first refuge, though, of the bashful of either sex is repellant—they assume an air of hauteur. It is a natural fence, a convenient armor, and many a man and many a woman has fought her battle behind it through life. No doubt it has been the armor of many a so called cold person.
