At Sunset.

The enchanted country of a dream;

mist-wreathed shore half veiled from sight But shining with a softened light; Like lovely hills through golden haze, On drowsy, Indian summer days.

In purple coolness lie those distant hills And as I gaze my heart with rapture thrills Vague hopes that place immortal rest Among those "Islands of the Blest."

Whene'er the dust and turmoil of the day Choke out my life, and heart and brain give In that far sunset land I seek for balm; In that celestial sea is heavenly calm. Whene'er I think of hopes gone down, Of buried joys and friendships flown—

Lift mine eyes to rich fruition there. Come crowding o'er my soul the spell and Of loves and hopes of earlier years.

In that great sea of light, I drown my tears And through the portals of that setting sun I see a grander life beguu.
