"HOMEWARD." Song for Baritone or Con-tralto, Music by Oscar F. Telgmann. 30 cents. This Song has been f vorably spoken of by Local Critics. We append the words:

The long, fierce storm has ended, The weary day has passed, and now beneath the fading light We are homeward bound at last.

See, where the last glow lingers.
Off there neath the western skips, For there the harbor lies. On, list to the music stealing The darkling waters o'er, Tis the welcome home they're sing ng

As they wait upon the shore. Come home come home, b side the sea, We wait, we wait to welcome thee To home and rest beside the sea, We wait to welcome thee.

Yo-ho, yo-bo, then row, boys, row, See how we saim the waters free; We soon shall cross the harbor bar And rest beside the sea.

SECOND VERSE. To many a home-bound mar'r er.
Life's weary storm is o'er,
He hears the water breaking
Upon the heavenly shore.

He sees the radiant harbor Beneath the setting sun Where he shall drop the anchor, All the weary voyage done. There's hon e, and rest and loved ones, And a welcome h :me they're singing

As they wait upon the shore. Come home, come home, beside the sea, We wait, we wait to welcome thee To home and rest beside the ee. We wait to welcome thee. We come, we come to "home, sweet home, we stretch our eager hands bettere, No more to fear the billows roll But rest upon the shore.
