hunters smoking their pipes; so he bought a pipe as part of his outfit.

After he had tramped around through the woods all the morning and had not seen a living thing to shoot at, he be-came tired and sat down under a tree he had read it was the proper thing for a hunter to do, to smoke his pipe. He sat at the foot of a large hickory tree, and as he puffed slowly and painfully at the pipe, he began to consider that hunting was not so much fun after all. His legs were tired, his hands were scratched by the brambles, and there was a big blister on his shoulder where he had been carrying his "I don't believe there are any squir-rels in these woods, anyhow," he muttered in disgust. A titter in the tree above him attracted his attention, and he stopped to listen.

"He don't believe there are any squirrels! Ha, ha, ha!"

"Teel he, he, he!" "How that smoke smells! Phew, it's worse than gun-powder," came from

"I don't see how men can smoke the nasty stuff," chattered the second "Nor I. Let's drop a nut on his pipe

Then followed another titter, and plump down came a big walnut on the bowl of the pipe; the stem slipped from Mr. Thompson's nerveless lips, and the pipe fell on the ground beside him.

"Good!" exclaimed both voices in

Mr. Thompson looked up. There, on a branch just above his head, sat two squirrels gazing down upon him with great satisfaction. "We put your old pipe out," cried the larger one, in great glee. "Come up here," added the second voice, invitingly. Mr. Thompson looked at the tree fifteen feet smooth and solid, without a limb or knot to afford a foot-hold. "I can't come up," he replied. "Come on! come on! why not?" shouted the two squirrels in chorus.

"Just stick your claws into the rough bark, and come on Mr. Thompson shook his head sadly Orders received at either the Grove Inn and looked down at his hands. He gave an involuntary start. His hands had grown smaller; he had grown smaller, and in place of his carefully kept white fingers and his rather small feet, of which he was very proud, were four hairy paws just like a squirrel's: his grav cordurov shooting-coat had changed into gray fur, and he was conscious of a long bushy tail which swept over his back. He shook himself for a moment to realize that the change was true, then sprang to his feet and scampered lightly up the side of the

"We told you, you could come up all right," exclaimed the larger squirrel, as Mr. Thompson gained the limb. "You look quite like a respectable squirrel," said the other. "I say," interrupted the other,

"what do you want to shoot us for? We never do vou any harm, but you men are always after us.' Mr. Thompson looked very sheepish for a few minutes; finally he muttered something to the effect that he did not shoot any. "I know." answered the squirrel, cheerfully, "you never shoot, because, in the first place, you are so much interested in what is going on on the ground that you never think to look up in the trees: then, if somebody points us out to you, you do as you did the season. It is now obtainable on draught at the eading hotels and restaurants throughout the going to do;" and the squirrel laughed other day, and stop to see what we are > "Well, you see," explained Mr. Thompson, volubly, "I don't care for gunning, but I am interested in the habits of animals, and I try to study them at every opportunity. "Interested, eh? Well, then, I think

I can show you a thing or two. Come on," said the larger squirrel. He jumped from branch to branch, Mr. Thompson following. At last they reached a tall tree, nearly at the top of which was what appeared to be a great bunch of dry leaves lodged in a crotch. But when Mr. Thompson came close to it he discovered that it was made of twigs, curiously twined together, and made into a sort

"This," said the squirrel, "is my summer residence. You see it is strongly enough built to withstand the lighter storms of summer, then the foliage on the trees protects it as well.'

"How do you get in?" inquired Mr. "Here is the doorway, on the southeast side. "Why on the southeast side?" The squirrel laughed, then answered: "You know we squirrels are very fond of sunshine, and we even go so far as to always build the doors of our houses toward the south, unless some obstacle prevents. Won't you come in?" he continued, politely.

Mr. Thompson entered. He was in a circular room about as large as a bov's head. It was lined with an abundance of dry leaves, and really seemed very cozy. He only remained a moment, however, for his guide asked him to go and see his winter quar-

They jumped from tree to tree, until they at last came to a magnificent old oak. The squirrel scampered up, and Mr. Thompson followed close behind. Suddenly he paused. On the under side of one of the great branches was a knot-hole. The squirrel entered, and Mr. Thompson followed. They were in the hollow of the old tree. Up at one end, above the knot-hole, the tree grew smaller, and the squirrel had used this space for storing his winter provisions of nuts and corn. At the other end, where the hollow grew larger, was a bed of dry leaves and moss. After having admired the winter residence, they started to the tree where they had first met. When they had reached the branch they sat down to

"Do you keep all your winter stores in that tree?" inquired Mr. Thomp-tiny tongue of flame was lapping its way toward where Mr. Thompson's game bag lay. A thought flashed across his mind, "My powder is in that game bag!" he exclaimed. "Jump for it," replied the squirrel.

"Just spring from the branch and guide yourself with your tail."

Mr. Thompson sprang, but he did not seem to get the knack of guiding himself with his tail, for over and over he tumbled until he reached the ground, just in time to hear a terrible explosion. He lay for a moment stunned, then sprang to his feet and rubbed his eyes.
There lay his game bag torn to rags.
About twenty feet off was his shot pouch. The two barrels of his gun had burst, and the whole outfit, in fact,

He gazed sadly at the wreck. Then for the first time, he realized that he was burned. He looked at himself. His coat was half burned off, and his hand was full of specks of powder from Nov. 2015.

I have made an analysis of samples of the Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, prepared by the Puttner Emulsion Co., and they have explained to me the details of their process. The ingredients used, and the mechanical processes to which they are successively subjected, enable this Company to prepare a permanent Emulsion without the use of acids or alkalies. This preparation has been known to me for many years, and when carefully prepared is certainly a great improvement upon the Crude Cod Liver Oil not only being milder in flavor, but having the more substantial advantage of being in the best form for digestion or assimilation.

The "Thirteen club," which annually sits down at dinner on Friday, thirteen strong, prides itself on having overthrown the so-called superstition that thirteen is an unlucky number. In point of fact the club has shown that it is as ignorant of the nature of ill-luck as it is reckless in trifling with it.

The attempt to test the validity of an unlucky sign by voluntarily and boldly trifling with it is a very foolish proceeding. It is, in its way, as great a display of ignorance as Prof. Tyn-dall made when he proposed his famous prayer-gauge. You cannot test the value of prayer in any such way, neither can you prove that to sit down at dinner with twelve persons besides yourself is unlucky by simply doing it. Everybody knows that if thirteen people dine together the very worst kind of ill-luck will follow. The members of the Thirteen club have assumed that death is the invariable form in which the alleged ill-luck manifests itself, and as they have often dined together and as all of them are not yet dead, they assume that they have disproved the theory that thirteen is an unlucky number. This assumption is utterly unwarranted. Ill-luck like good-luck, can not be dictated to, manifest itself in unexpected ways. Has no ill-luck overtaken the reckelection, or in connection with jack pots that seemed outwardly full of promise but proved in the end costly delusions? Has no one of them been affiicted with plumbers or gas inspectors, and have all of them escaped undesirable relatives, or sermons lasting forty-five minutes? If they have suffered in these ways, how do they know that their sufferings are not directly due to their audacious dinners? Ill-luck chooses its own time for striking its victims. If the members of the Thirteen club have as yet escaped, it does not follow that they are their criminal folly will be apparent. live long enough, and when they come to die they will have the bitter reflection that if they had respected what they call "the 'thirteen superstition' they might perhaps have lived longer.
