over what he should do in the crisis through which the political parties of the old land are now passing. He hesitated about accepting office, and only steps into it now on being given the assurance that Mr. Gladstone wil "smooth the way" for his government, What magnanimity the grand old man thus displays! It is more than was to be expected from one whose responsibilities as a public man have been in creased ten fold by the petty politicians. Mr. Gladstone's action may be surprising, but he is a statesman, and his admirers may depend upon it that ere long he will lead his party back into power amid a wave of popularity even greater than that which attended his advent into power in 1878. But a word about the new premier. He is third marquis and eighth earl of Salisbury, and was born in 1830. As Lord Robert Cecil he was a Conservative member of Parliament from 1853 to 1868. Until the death of his elder brother, however, he had only a younger son's son's portion, and in order to live he wrote extensively for reviews and magazines. His first office was secretary of state for India in the late Lord Darby's third administration, but, differing with his chief and Mr. Disraeli on the reform bill of 1866. he resigned. The request was granted. W. Grange was charged with assaulting W. Flynn, tinsmith, on Saturday night, a week ago. It appeared in the evidence that the defendant had told some parties he would like to fight Flynn. This came to the ears of Flyan and he asked the defendent bis reason for the remark, but did not receive a satisfactory reply. On Saturday night (16th inst.) about 10 o'clock Flynn said he and his wife were on their way to Patterson's grocery. when the defendant followed them. Behind him were several other young men When Flynn reached the store and was about to enter it the defendant struck him on the side of the head. The defendant swore that he asked Flynn to fight on Saturday night and was invited to come around the corner of Patter son's grocery store. Flynn and his wife and defendant were talking, and when the store was reached Flynn shoved him. He then struck Flynn. HEAPEST Stock in the City.

Dr. Day presented the report of the Committee on Rules and Regulations. It stated that the solicitor had reported that the council had no power to hold its final examinations except at Toronto JUNE 18TH: and Kingston, but that primary examinations could be heard wherever the council chose. Dr. Fenwick moved that the Legislative Committee be instructed to obtain if possible an amendment to the Act so that the council examinations may be held at Ottawa. Lost.
