I have walked the world for fourscore years And they say that I am old, And my beart is ripe for the reaper Death, And my years are well nigh told It is very true; it is very true; am old, and I bide my time, But my heart will leap at a scene like this, And I haif renew my prime.

Piny on, play on! I am with you there, In the midst of your merry ring; can feel the thrill of the daring jump And the rush of the breathless swing hide with you in the fragrant hav. And I whoop the smothered call: And my feet slip up on the seedy floor. And I care not for the fall.

I am willing to die when my time shall come And I shall be glad to go; For the world at best is a weary place, And my pulse is getting low; But the grave is dark, and the heart will fail In treading its gloomy way But it wiles my heart from its drearness

DANGEROUS CHARGE.

It was the last night of the year, and a few congenial spirits had gathered in the the cold. bachelor apartments of a mutual friend so spend in cheerful song and story the few remaining hours of the old year's life. Only two of the company had failed to add his share of these to the gen eral eptertainment.

"Come Mortimer," said the host, "It's your turn now. You that have travelled about so much ought to be able to tell something worth bearing." "A unanimous request that the host's suggestion should be carried out having been made, Mortimer began his story: "It was as long ago as the year '4 when I was quite a young man, with very little experience of the world. though I thought I knew more than do now, or am very likely to know. For the last three years I had been bookkeeper to a wholesale dry gools house in the western part of New York, enjoy ing in no small degree its esteem and confidence, which I appreciated and did ] my best to deserve. With the desire to perform my duties well and acceptably, had an additional incentive to stand high in the estimation of the firm in the form of the lovely daughter of its head partner, with whom I was madly, and, as it seemed then, hopelessly in love. "It was not the absence of fortune and position that made me so faint-hearted. for I had heard Mr. Crofton, her father, say more than once that he did not care
