"My name is Jack, and I am as fine a specimen of the sniny black bear as there is living. I was snatched from oniface, my mother in the Lake Superior wilds gements | when I was six weeks old; was rescued Indians from death by Dr. Libbey, of Cleveland, Ohio, who bought me of two drunken brutes that were dragging me through the streets by a rope. I was made happy in my new home, and grew and grew until the doctor concluded he had an elephant on his hands instead of a bear. I now belong to the New York Central Park menagerie, whither I am bound; and if they feed me and treat me well I will make lots of fun."

Dr. Libbey made a present of Jack to eath in bed alongside the city. The only condition that Dr. Laugue, near Quebec. Libbey attached to the gift was that Jack shall not be put in a cage with other bears, lest he destroy them. "I have visited all the famous menstition was heard at Osgoode | ageries and zoological gardens in the world," Mr. Conklin said, "and none contains a bear so big as Jack. I think he will be a favorite."
