LIFE IN JAVA.

Travellers in Java are much impressed by the fact that in Batavia they never met beggars of any description as in all other parts of the East. But if they will reflect, I think they will remember another pest which amounts to the same thing and is surely as great a nuisance. I refer to the street-hawkers, who dog your footsteps wherever you go, and are certainly as persistent in their importunities and as hard to avoid as any beggar I ever met. They follow you along the street and into your hotel;
nor can you stop for an instant but you 25 50 paste jewelry to a toothpick, they can out before you, and you are solicited to "make bargains" for a cake of soap or they are, too, and always ready to leave it to a toss whether you shall give them

5 00 twice the price or nothing. Java is the home of the upas trees, and as it is only recently that true scientific explanations have been given of them, probably one theory may be interesting. Wonderful stories were told about the valley where they grew. No living creature was able to live an instant exposed to its effects, and even birds in flying over would drop dead, so that whole valleys were covered with their skeletons. When scientific men first began to inquire into it, they could only with the greatest difficulty induce the natives to accompany them to the oo spots, with such dread and superstition were they held. A peculiar feature in the earthquakes in this part of the world soon solved the problem and exploded the theory as to the trees them. selves. It was found that at a certain time the sulphurous vapors and noxious gases escaping through cracks in these valleys were so dense and poisonous as to be destructive to animal life, and at such times had so affected the natives that they had retained the memory of such places and avoided them forever afterward. No eyil effects were experienced by those who traversed the valleys, though there was unmistakable evidence that at periodical intervals they were deservingly to be avoided.

The Affecting Death-bed Request of Mr. Robert White.

Mr. Robert White, of the Sunday Demoerat, was recently taken seriously ill. Dr. difficulty. His friends gathered at his bedside. The physician shook his head sadly when questioned concerning his recovery. At an early hour in the morning the Poet Geoghegan visited his old friend. Mr. White lay propped up 11 79 with pillows. He closed his eyes and did not respond when the poet spoke to "Poor fellow," murmured Dr. "I hardly think he can recover. I think he is unconscious.' "Don't tell me that, doctor dear," said

Mr. Reiche has for several years past been shippir live quail to England, where they have been turned loose upon the grounds landed proprietors to breed. In consequence of the growing scarcity of the quail in this country he has conceived the idea of replenishing the Eastern stock from the Western prairies. The quail are easily netted or trapped,

"But I say you must not happen to I hall make no provision for such an occurrence; you must not lose it." This put a new train of thought in the young man's mind, and he found that if he was determined to do anything, he could do it. He made such a provision against every contingency that he never lost anything. He found this equally true about forgetting. If a cer-
