DEFECTIVE ALARM SYSTEM. The first objection offered was that to B. W. Watkins was in the city last the system of giving alarms. The police gong seemed defective; either that or the pelice could not count. When an alarm was struck the gongs in the Chief's and Assistant Chief's houses, in the engine house and in the police station Trustees, Collegiate Institute, was to sounded. For some time the firemen, after getting the horses ready, had to notify the police before the bell was rung. Delay was thus caused at the engine house and the firemen were not called out as they should be. If the gong at the police station was properly managed the bell would be rung prompt ly and the firemen would be at the fire as soon as the engine.
