spectacle. Has the Dean of Bangor reflect them in a wicked world is not an edifying ed on the consequences of his uncalled for remarks? Has he considered to how many venerable females the never failing pot tea has proved a continual comfort? Taken warm with sugar, like less innocent liquids. that which the Dean affects to despise has many a time, and oft, brought consolation to the widow, and, probably, the orphan likewise. Pray tell the Dean it does not come within the duties of the elergy to regulate the digestion of the faithful. Were that so, indeed, the task should not be left to the chance prejudice of individuals; but it would be absolutely necessary for Convocation to draw up an orthodox dietary of what to eat, drink and avoid. Otherwise, well meaning persons might fall into all Orleans Co., N.Y., will again visit as | kinds of dietetic extravagances -some recommending oatmeal, as a nourishing spe cies of food, to the notice of their parishion ers; and others extolling the virtue of this or that patent preparation of rolled oats or wheat, at the risk of turning the pulpit into an advertising medium. should tea be picked out for pecial ani madversion? The Dean need not have confined his impeachment to that lecoction alone. He might have stigmatized almost every article of food. If men and women were to eat and drink only of those things which would be sure to agree with their constitution and to do them good, we should have crowds starving in the midst of plenty. A bad example has been set the Church, and the door opened to a host of clerica! possibilities. Suppose a bishop were to fulminate against the goose-it might be said, and with some truth, that roast goose, particularly when stuffed with sage and onions, and taken with large quantities of apple sauce, is not altogether wholesome-should we, in that case, forbid goose ciubs by statute and rob the poor man of his Christmas dinner? Alas, for the fatal goose! Tea is really an interesting herb and the tried friend of virtue. There is no record of a murder having been committed under the harmless beverage. House breakers do not partake of it in order to stimulate them in their predatory excursions. On the contrary, students and other harmless persons derive infinite and mild gratification by using Crawford's l'ure Tea. It clears the head, comforts the sto mach, and conduces to the spirit of active benevolence. Tea is never served out to soldiers going into action, not even in the Russian army. And why! Because it in duces "sweetness and light;" not the war fever and the thirst of gore. Hence youwill find in politics and public life the de criers of public armies and the denouncers
