employed by the St. Lawrence Steamstone, Rudd's quarry; the sloop Gazelle boat Company (composed of Messrs. A. is loa ling posts and lumber for Deser-F. Barker, Ciayton, and Folger Bros. Kingston) to get out the design of passenger steamer. The Captain obeyed instructions, his model was adopted, and he went to Buffalo and ordered the frames. At Clayton, on Dec. 14th, work was begun on the new steamer, and or Saturday last she was launched. At o'clock the Maud left the Ferry wharf for Clayton, with one hundred people, night announced the vessel's arrival at | who desired to witness the launch. The weather was delightful. The air was bracing, and the sun shone out glorious ly. After a sail of two bours Clayton was reached. The little town was very active. Bunting was on the main build ings, and on numerous yachts and steamers in the harbor. Over a thousand people assembled in the vicinity of the shipyard, and they did not all belong to the village. Some came from Perch River and from the country back of Clayton. The steamers Puritan and Island Wanderer carried excursionists plete in order to be effectual. Here coal for Chicago; schr. Freeman left from Gananoque and Alexandria Bay. When the Mand arrived workmen were already busy loosening the wedges under the steamer. A little after 3 o'clock everything was in readiness, and the hrst effort was made to launch the craft. She > then attached to her bow, and a lot of muscular men pulled for all they were worth, but the ropes broke several times and let down some of the pullers close to the ground. Again the shipwrights got to work, this time with jackscrews as well as ropes, and after about an hour and a half's tugging the boat was moved to the foot of the ways, with her stern in the water. Here she again stopped, much to the vexation of the spectators. At 6 o'clock the majority of those present left for their homes. the feeling having possessed them that the steamer would not then be launched. Capt. Pierce, the designer of the steamer, said he would make one more attempt; if it was not successful he would abandon the job until a later date. This time the power of the Mand was called into requisition. A rope was attached from her stern to that of the new steamer. Everybody now became satisfied that the St. Lawrence would ropes again, and the Mand labored hard. but still the new steamer remained fast. A second attempt was made by the Maud, however, and the St. Lawrence slid off the ways so gracefully that those on board hardly knew that she was going. As she left the ways the steamers in the harbor whistled terrifically and a "hurrah" went up from the crowd on the dock. The new boat was caught by the strs. Maud and Island Wanderer and the latter towed her into the dock. She is a handsome steamer, sits prettily in the water, and when completed will be a veritable floating palace.

DIMENSIONS OF THE BOAT. She is 160 feet long, 40 ft. beam, width of hull, 25 ft. and depth of hold 7ft. 4 in ; with her boiler her draught will be 4 ft. 6 in. Her topsides are plated with steel 5 ft. 9 in. wide, and her hull is planked with rock elm from the keel to the steel plate. She will be exclusively a passenger boat, finished and furnished most expensively. Her seats will be plush upholstered and the furniture of the most costly kind. Mirrors, marble top tables, etc. will adorn her interior. The cabin windows will be of plate glass. These can be opened out four feet, admitting all the air and light required. There will be six state rooms. On the promenade deck will be a refreshment room and smoking room; on her hurricane deck rooms for the captain and pilot. There will be a sky light on this deck, allowing the light to stream down into the cabin and over the stairway.

EXCELLENT MOTIVE POWEP. Her boiler was made at the Kingsford boiler works at Oswego. It will be capable of running a 950 horse power engine. The cost was $6,000. The engine of the new boat has a cylinder 82 inches in diameter, and it has power enough to turn a 17 feet wheel 40 times a minute. It is a 640 horse power. The buckets are 54 feet long by 21 feet wide.

WHY SHE WOULDN'T SLIDE. Mr. Johnston, the owner of the shipyard, was a little disappointed with the launch. He thought the steamer would slide off quice easily, and thinks there must have been something beneath her that held her back. He says he has seen a great many launches at his yard, but he never saw one like that of the St. Lawrence. The steamers Niagara, Cataract, Bay State, Outario and New York were all built at Clayton, and all them were launched successfully.

There will be a barber's chair on the St. Lawrence, and a barber will be employed during the season.

The new steamer will be brought to Kingston as soon as her boiler is put in. When finished she will have cost the company about $50,000. She will ply between Cape Vincent and Alexandria Bay in connection with the Rome, Water-
