THE BREAD-WINNERS A SOCIAL STUDY. IN AND OUT OF WEDDINGS. Alice Belling was seated before her glass braiding her long hair. Her mother had come in from her own room, as her custom often was, to chat with her daughter in the half hour before bed-time. It gratified at once her maternal love and pride to watch the exquisite beauty of her child, as she sat, dressed in a white wrapper that made her seem still taller than she was, brushing and braiding the luxuriant tresses that gave under the light every tint and reflection of which gold could boast. The pink and green of the round arm as the loose sleeve would slip to the elbow, the poise of the proud head, the full white column of the neck, the soft curve of cheek and chin—all delighted a lover. But as with all her light-headedness, there was enough of discretion, or perhaps of innate New England reserve, to keep her from expressing to Alice her pleasure in her beauty. So the wholesome-minded girl never imagined the admiration of which she was the object, and thought that her mother only liked to chat a little before sleeping. They talked of trivial matters, of the tea at Mrs. Hyson's, of Farnham's new purple dress, which made her sailower than ever, of rain and fair weather.

"I think," said Mrs. Belling, "that Phraya Dallas gets more and more stylish every day. I don't wonder at Arthur Farnham's devotion. That would make an excellent match—they are both so dreadfully clever. By the way, he has not been here this week. And I declare! I don't believe you have ever written him that note of thanks."

"No," said Alice, smiling—she had school'd her self by this time to speak of him carelessly. "I was too much frightened to thank him on the spot, and now it would be ancient history. We must save our thanks till we see him."

"I want to see him about other things. You must write and ask him to dinner to-morrow or next day."

"Don't you think he would like it better if you would write?" "To you again—as if it mattered. Write that 'Mamma bids me. There, your hair is braided. Write the note now, and I will send it over in the morning before he gets away."

Alice rose and walked to her escritoire, her long robe trailing, her thick braids hanging almost to the floor, her fair cheek touched with a delicate spot of color at the thought of writing a formal note to the man she worshipped. She took a pen and wrote "My dear Mr. Farnham, he had heart flutter and her eyes grow dim. While she was writing she heard her mother say: "What a joke?" She looked up and saw that Mrs. Belling, having pushed open the shutters, had picked up her opera-glass and was looking through it at something out of the window.

"Do you know, Alice," she said laughing, "since that allanias tree was laughing, you can see straight into his library from here. There he is now, sitting at his desk."

"Mamma!" pleaded Alice, rising and trying to take the glass away from her. "Don't do that, I beg!" "Nonsense," said her mother, keeping her away with one hand and holding the glass with the other. "There comes Budgey to close the blinds. The show is over. No; he goes away, leaving them open."

"Mamma, I will leave the room if my goodness! look at that!" cried the widow putting the glass into her daughter's hand and sinking into a chair with a sigh.

"Alice," she said, "this is no place for you. I will call the servants and send for a surgeon, and you must go home."

"Oh, no, mamma. I see I have frightened you, but there is no need to be frightened. Yes, call the servants, but do not let them come in here for a while, not till the doctor comes. They can do no good. He is dead."

"There was such intensity of passion in the girl's prayer that her mother, when the servants came in, in answer to the bell, she stepped outside the door and said, 'Captain Farnham has been badly hurt. Two of you go for the doctor at once. You need not come in at present. My daughter and I will take care of him.'"

"She went back, closing the door behind her. Alice was smiling. "There, you are a star! I will love you forever. It is only for a moment. The doctors will soon be here, and then I must give him up."

"Oh, Alice, the poor lady whimpered, "why do you talk so wildly? What do you mean?" "Don't cry, mamma! It is only for a moment. It is all very simple. I am not crazy. He was my lover!"

"Heaven help us!" "Yes, this dear man, this noble man offered me his love, and I refused it. I may not have been crazy then, but I am not now. I can love him now. I will be his widow—if I was not his wife. We will be two widows together, and ways. Now you must not do anything to stir me up. He is mine."

"Give me one of those towels," she exclaimed, suddenly. "I can tie up his head so that it will stop bleeding till the doctors come."

"She took the towels, tore strips from her own dress and in a few moments, with singular skill and tenderness, she had stopped the flow of blood from the wound."

"There! He looks almost as if he were asleep," she said. "Oh, my love, my love!"

A HOME DRUGGIST TESTIFIES. Popularity of home is not always the best test of merit, but we point proudly to the fact that no other medicine has won for itself such universal approbation in its own city, state, and country, and among all people, as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The following letter from one of our best-known Massachusetts Druggists should be of interest to every sufferer:—

RHEUMATISM. "Eight years ago I had an attack of Rheumatism, so severe that I could not move from the bed, or dress, without help. I tried several remedies without success, until I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by the use of two bottles of which I was completely cured. I have sold large quantities of your Sarsaparilla, and it still retains its wonderful popularity. The many notable cures it has effected in this vicinity convince me that it is the best blood medicine ever offered to the public." R. F. MARSH, River St., Buckland, Mass., May 15, 1892.

SALT RHEUM. GEORGE ANDREWS, overseer in the Lowell Jail, was afflicted with Salt Rheum in its worst form, and actually covered more than half the surface of his body and limbs. He was entirely cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. See certificate in Ayer's Almanac for 1893.

PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists; $1, six bottles for $5.
