WHERE IS MY WIFE?

A Man Deprived of His Wife - A Old Flame Revived - A Heartless Piece of Business

Where is my wife? Was the query of Mr. J. Ryan, of Barrefield, last evening, when he had returned from his daily toil and found his house deserted. He went from door to door, and his hands were laid on his wife's locks, and seemed unable to realize that the woman he loved so well had betrayed his confidence. But, alas! it was too true. Two years ago she came from Limerick, on the ocean she became acquainted with George Smith and three other young Englishmen, and before the voyage was ended they were intimate friends. They landed at Montreal and cheerfully set out together for this city. "Maria" - the woman's christian name - worked in several places as a domestic, her last engagement being with Mrs. Strachan, Barrefield. George Smith in the meantime enlisted as a gunner in "B" Battery, Ryan loved in a little frame cottage at the foot of Fort Henry. "Maria" heard that he wanted a wife, and is said to have remarked, "Here I go, I'll catch on." While Mr. Ryan worked at Strachan's, she did not understand what she was up to, but she was up to it. She had a little money, and she had a little love, and she had a little hope. She had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again, and she had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again.

She had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again, and she had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again. She had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again, and she had a little hope that she would see Mr. Ryan again.
