AN ALYSES OF TEAS AND COFFEES

By the Government Analyst, May 1st, 1884.

I hereby certify that I have received from Messrs. Strond Brothers a number of samples of their tens and coffees, representing their entire stock now in their saveral warehouses in the city, and at their request I have submitted the same to analyses and microscopic examination, and now beg to report on the fellowing samples of coffee and chicory : No. 4-GENUINE COFFEE MIXTURES, Selling at 25c per 1b. No. 5-COFFEE AND CHICORY MIXTURES, Selling at 35c per lb. All of these samples I find to be genuine and of excellent quality. Sample No. four is a judicious mixture No's I and 2, which is decidedly preferable to either separately. No 5 is a still further improvement, and forms a deliciously flavored coffee which, to those who prefer a little clicory, will be found both economical, fragrant and strong. The Chicory is genuine and of the English cultivated fariety, which is superior to Canadian grown Chicory.

Eight samples of CHINA TEAS and eleven samples of JAPAN TEAS are now in hand and under examination, and will be the subject of a future report. J. BAKER EDWARDS, PH.D., F.C.S., Professor of Chemistry pur Public Analyst, Montrea erto only courtesied to him, trembling, from afar.

No trifle that affected the child's health or happiness was beyond his care or dignity; in the recesses of the scullery the woman often marveled how "master" managed to keep her so clean and neat, since, by all accounts, he had never troubled himself about his other never troubled himself about his other children, or probably seen one of them dressed or undressed in his life. One room only had been kept sacred from the detectives and other seekers; this was the bed room of the late Mrs. Eyre. Mr. Eyre went to it some two or three times daily, but spent the greater part of his indoor existence in the nursery, where, in feeding, washing, dressing, and amusing Madcap's child, he sery, where, in feeding, washing, dressfound himself sufficiently busy. He could not endure to call in some rough village girl to take charge of her: he had written to town for such a person as he wanted, and meantime he could leave the child alone as often as he pleased, always happy, always singing, in all things the dawn of that other

He found his own independence of thought and power of endurance curiously reproduced in this little child of hardly three years, and perhaps was the more drawn to her that, though out wardly Madeap's very copy, inwardly she was himself, with his own strain of character, courage, and will.

He blessed Josephine that at least she had not taught the child four-however negligent or unprincipled the Frenchwoman might have been, she had clearly not been unkind to her, and she had kept the child's person and linen exquisitely, so that Mr. Evre had no trouble on the score of clothes, and with clumsy hands kept her as fresh and clean as a new pin When, on the night after his return she kneeled up close to his breast and said her evening prayers, he harkened to her like one in a dream; how long ago was it he had heard such words?-

Give Thy Lamb a little place! it had been something like this that Dody was saying one morning when he surprised the young mother and her boys together, and he had harshly sent them away from her. O' Heavens, how cruel be had been to her! He knew now what it must have cost her to unwind Dody's arms from about her neck, how his stifled sobs must have wrung her heart as the little brothers went heavily away. . . . She had said to him once that he knew not the kingdom of love he missed in his children. Ay, but those were boys, and this was Madeap, and the only true love, the universal love, was as far from Mr. Eyre's heart now as ever. confidences, revealing her brother in a new light to that in which Mr. Eyre had viewed his silent, stubborn son. To-night, when she had fallen asleep in her little cot. Mr. Eyre sat for awhile watching her as a poor man who hugs himself in the joy of a miraculously found treasure; then taking a light, zle that room contained. Sooner or later, he was convinced that his mind would recover the lost clew that so eternally baffled him. Some day be would remember something that had happened in this room on the night of the murder, and that he had forgotten; for the knowledge was in his brainperchance in some diseased cell of it;

ward bound coaling-ship was discovered within twenty-four hours of its sailing, and when they dragged him forth was dead. By a letter found in his pocket, addressed to him at Lovel by a London firm of seedsmen, he was at once identified, and the ship put back to leave the body at the sea-port village whence the captain had unwillingly brought him. The reward set on his brought him. The reward set on his broad by Mr. Evre made the man's body a valuable one, and a messenger to the Red Hall (only a dezen miles distant) soon brought its master to the ship, and to the narrow bunk, where lay all that remained of a once faithful servant. But though Mr. Eyre found intense horror and fear stamped on the gar-dener's features, he could not detect the look of the murderer who leaps into with his victim. But none held with Mr. Eyre's belief in the man's innocence, and it was only by the exertion of great influence that Digges obtained Christian burial, for on all sides and by her husband's friends and foes alike he was accepted as the CHAPTER IX. Mr. Eyre was now at leisure to think about Hester Clarke; but on inquiry at the house in which she had lodged he heard that she had left the place on the morning after the funeral of Mrs. Eyre and her child. She had announced her intention of joining her former servant. Janet Stork, now undergoing penal servitude for the murder of Hester Clarke's child. Mr. Eyre asked if there aloud as Mr. Eyre disappeared; "and meant any, but just stayed on and on, because she couldn't tear herself away from his child, the image of her own. But Mr. Eyre as he rode homeward thought little of the woman's significance of manner, his mind was occupied with the main fact that Hester Clarke was within reach of a six weeks' voyage, and that at any given time he could lay his hand on her, and this certainty enabled him to turn without haste to the remodeling of his establishment and other affairs that had fallen somewhat into neglect during his long alsence. To be sure, he had left an agent in charge of his estate, and the man had done well, but not foo well, so that Mr. Eyre for many days found duty out of doors, after which he took his pleas-

BIBLE COMPETITION NO. 7 - CLOSING SEPTEMBER 11th OPEN TO THE WORLD-GREAT CLUB OFFER.

The Leading Rewards are Lot 50 x 150 at Toronto Junction, Pianes, Organs, Sewing Machines, Gold and Silver Watches, Silver Tea Sets, &c.

The proprietor of the Ludies' Journal now announces a magnificent list of rewards for correct answers to Bible questions. It is surpising how little is known of the Bible. The questions are not so difficult this time as last, and we should be glad if there was a hearty response so as to encourage the proprie tor of the Journal to persevere in his good work. It was announced in the June issue of the Ledies Journal that the competition which closed last mouth would be the last for the present, but it has been decided to try one more. All money must be sent by post office or express. No information will be given to any one more than is stated here. So send on answers, and don't waste time writing. Do not send post age stamps unless six cents is add for the discount. Remit by post office or der, scrip or small coin.

CHAPTER VIII.

From the moment that Mr. Eyre had shut the police out, he had admitted no one to his house save a stout kitchen wench, whom he had himself fetched from the village, and installed in the kitchen, forbidding her to move beyond it, or to receive company therein, on peril of her instant dismissal. He did the foraging himself, and would stalk in with an armful of loaves and flesh, but the only culinary point upon which he showed anxiety was the child's bread and milk, and this he would have boiled to a nicety, standing over her so as to confound the woman who had hith-
