Lightly as they fell, he heard the girl's fleet steps approach him, but did not turn till a gentle hand touched his arm, and an anxious voice said:

"Are you ill?" Might a man have tears in his eyes yet neither look, nor be, unmanly? Per-haps Madcap got an insight into the real beauty of grief when nobly and unshrinkingly borne; perhaps she got a glimpse of the mingled force and un-selfishness of this man's character as he turned toward her, and she learned his heart then, at once and for ever. "No, I am not ill," he said; "but how long you have been-an hour, I should think. I was afraid you had gone home through she village."

"And no strangers ever trespass here?" he said, talking for the mere sake of prolonging those precious mo-ments that would so soon be over. "You are the first stranger who has come to Lovel for many years," she said, looking at him wistfully; "Martha knew you for one directly-she has lived in the parish forty years and knows the face of every man, woman, and child in

"Yet I have been in Lovel more than once within the last forty years," he said, absently, and as one whom a thought had just struck that he must puzzle out later. "But the most curious thing of all is,"

went on the girl, "that Job should have mistaken you for Frank; for I know now that he did . . . it is written on his face-and I bless you for the kind thought of him that brought you to him just in time, and made him die so hap-"Yes, he mistook me," said the stranger; "and do you bless me, Madcap?" he said, gently, and with such yearning tenderness as moved her heart to pity for him; "then, if so, and since once your mother blessed me, too, I can never be truly wretched. And keep your old beautiful belief in Frank; perhaps he deserved it, and your mother loved him, and your father loved him, too, once; and it is something to be shrined so beautifully in a young girl's

"Now you are speaking like yourself," she said, joyously; for the at core of her heart she was human, and loved all things, hating to find speck or stain in any; "like Lancelot, who was proud, you may be sure, of his brother knights." "And Frank is Lancelot?" he said. "No; you are Lancelot," she said, looking at him with those clear boys eves that sometimes shine out of a young girl's face. "I shall always think of you by that name.

"So you will think of me sometimes, child?" he said, a gleam of sunshine crossing his sad face. "You will spare a thought or two from your hero to give "Yes," she said, earnestly; "and, somehow, you have brought him nearer to me-I know now how soldiers look and speak; I have got a better, more sober idea about him now. He will always seem to me the heart of a lost angel in the earth; but I think that to be a hero one need not be young and beautiful, and perhaps find more about me in my daily lite. And I have so often thought, she went on, coloring a little as one who fears to preach, "how much less easy we find it to see saints in the human beings around us than to dress up some scarcely seen, unknown creature in heroic guise, and, placing it in a niche, fall down and worship it? We cry out in wonder at the blindness of the men and women of old who stoned their saints and heroes, knowing them not, and every day are noble deeds done, noble lives drop or are slain in the struggle, and we bury them as common clay, carve no head stone above them, and the noblest heroes, the Purest Saints are those who in their lifetime toiled unnoticed, unrecognized among their very nearest and dearest, perhaps faintly pitied by them, as well as lov-

"And do you have such beautiful thoughts as these, Madcap?" said the stranger, who knew, ah, God! the mock-ery of this pity that we take thankfully from lesser souls. "Are these the things that go on in a young girl's mind? And your mother had such thoughts-even to her dying day.

"Did you know my mother very well?" said Madcap, whose color had waxed brilliant long before her little "sermon" was over, and who felt herself quite undeserving of his words. "Very well," he said, slowly. "She was not always here, you know; she was brought up by Lady Betty Tremayne. Is she living still?" "Yes; but father never forgave her for being unkind to my mother." A look of anger crossed the stranger's face. Had no one else been unkind to that beloved little Madcap, whose living image stood before him?

TEAS AND COFFEES By the Government Analyst, May 1st, 1884.

I hereby certify that I have received from Messrs. Strond Brothers a number of samples of their teas and coffees, representing their entire stock now in their several warehouses in the city, and at their request I have submitted the same to analyses and microscopic examination, and I now beg to report an the following samples of coffee and chicory No. 5-COFFEE AND CHICORY MIXTURES. Selling at ...... 35c per lb.

No. 6-GROUND ENGLISH MIXTURES, Selling at ...... 15c per lb. All of these samples I find to be ganuine and of excellent quality. Sample No. tour is a justicious mixture No's I and 2, which is decidedly preferable to either separately. No 3 is a still further improvement, and forms a deliciously flavored coffee which, to those who prefer a latticel icory, will be found both economical, fragrant and strong. The Chicory is genuine on lot the English cultivated variety, which is superior to Canadian grown Chicory. Eight samples of CHINA TEAS and eleven samples of JAPAN TEAS are now in band and under examination, and will be the subject of a future report.
