Origin of flem by the Democrats-The Candidates Nominated by the National Party.

The first convention of the Democratic party was held in 1832 at Baltimore, when Andrew Jackson was indorsed. In 1836 the party again convened at Baltimore, and on the third day, May 22nd, established the rule requiring a twothird's vote to nominate. The convention of 1844 had representatives from twenty-five states. This time there were several candidates Van Buren, Buchanan, Polk, Calhoun, Light and Shade of Daily Life-Little Incilead, but on the ninth ballot Polk came in as the first dark horse known to the party. Silas Wright, of New York, was (unanimously the nominee for the vicesen. In 1848, which met May 22nd Cass was nominated on the fourth bal: lot. Samuel J. Tilden and Simon Cameron were among the delegates. This was the time of the split on the free-soil question, and an opposition convention was held at Buffalo in August over which Chas F. Adams presided. This convention nominated Van Buren, and presidency. At the convention of 1852 Pierce, Cass and Douglas were the conspicuous candidates. Balloting began June 3 and ended June 7, when Pierce was given all but five votes. Illinois cast 11 votes for Jefferson Davis as vicepresident. Baltimore was abandoned gans.
