We could not find out what was the exact idea connected with this custom-probably much the same notion of luck as we attach to finding a horseshoe, especially one with the old nails still in their places. It has been suggested, and apparently with some reason, that in ancient pagan times it may have been a recognized symbol in serpent worship, and hence may have arisen in common uso against all manner of evil. The resemblance is obvious, more especially teathat species of harmless snake which is rounded at both ends, so that head and tail are apparently just alike. The creature moves backward and forward at pleasure, hence the old belief that it actually had two heads, and was indistructible, as even when cut into two parts it was sur posed that the divided heads would seek one another and re-unite. It stands to reason that in a snake worshipping community such a creature would be held in high reverence. Even in Scotland various snake-like bracelets and ornaments have been found, which seems to favor this theory, and at a very early period both suakes and horseshoes seem to have been engraved as symbols on sacred stones. We hear of the latter having been sculptured, not only on the threshold of old London houses, but even on that of ancient churches in vaparts of Great Britain.
