They were brought to Falmonth on Saposes has been struck at 2 cents on the turday by the German barque Montesuma, Captain Simmonson. They left Southampton on the 19th of May last in they were to take out to a gentleman in Sydney. About the beginning of July they experienced heavy weather near the equator. On the afternoon of July 5th the weather was most tempestnous, The mate (Stephens), who was steering, saw an enormous wave overtaking the yacht, which was going before the wind. SUGGESTED THEY SHOULD CAST LOTS as to who should be killed for food for the rest. Brooks considered they should rather die together. By this time Parker was in the last stage of exhaustion. The captain and the mate, who are both married men with families, discussed the advisability of killing Parker, who was evidently the nearest to death of the four, as they considered his loss Tuesday, 30th Sept., and Wed would be the least felt, inasmuch as he had no wife and family depending on him. They communicated their views to Brooks, but he declined to be a party to such an act. The captain and mate then decided to kill Parker. Before doing so, Dudley offered a prayer that they might be forgiven for what they were about to do. Parker was lying at the bottom of the boat in an almost insensible state, with his face on his arm. It was then arranged that Dudley should stab him, and that Stephens should hold him if he struggled. Brooks went to the bow of the boat, and, turning away his head, shut out the fearful scene with his hands. The captain then said to Parker, "Now Dick, your honr has come." Parker feebly replied, "What me sir ? Oh, don't. Dudley then ran a penknife into Parker's jugular vein, and he died in a few seconds. They
