leisurely puffing at our cigars when one ', of the hospital nurses came out and whispered to the doctor that Sailor John was "agoin." The passing away of a mortal is an event about which there is always something of the mysterious, and so we walked down the long corridor and entered Ward 12. The nurse was right. John was "agoin." Like an alto relievo, out of the crumpled pillow rose a face that was Roman in its rugged outline, and even the pinched nose, sunken eyes and compressed lips did not obliterate the likeness to some of those historic busts dug up among the ruins of early Italy. A student said it looked like Seneca, and truly there was much to recall the old philosopher in the wrin-

The man in bed 27, restless with fever, turned over so as to face the couch of the dying man, and with wild staring eyes watched every sinking respiration of the old sailor.

An awkward plethoric beetle buzzed around the gas jet in an irregular orbit, its hum being the only sound to break the silence which the faint breathings of the sufferer softly punctuated. The doctor lifted the sheet and felt the pulse of the patient. "It's about over," he remarked, and he laid down the

These was a rattle in the throat, a long-drawn sigh, as if all the sorrows of a lifetime were relieved as it died away, and then the eyes opened. They looked into the doctor's, and seeming to find comfort in the returning glance of compassion, they closed slowly. Then there was a twitching of the muscles around the mouth, and in a supreme climax of effort the lips moved and faintly came forth, "Hard a port it is, sir." A slight tremor shook his frame, and all was over.

John had reached harbor. Then there was a tread of feet in the corridor and the carriers of the dead came in, and John was taken out to the PICTURE FRAMING ESTABLISHMENTS dead-house and laid beside other stormtossed barks that had that day found a last mooring-place, whither the whole you will find a complete stock of NEW GOODS armada of humanity drift at last. The viz :- Steel Engravings, English Chromos, Oil hospital bell gave one stroke to announce the departure of another soul, RICH and then the nurses looked over the ward book to see who next should receive his dose of medicine, and hospital life resumed its quiet current. We went back to the portico and resumed our cigars. "A curious fellow, 212 OPERA-HOUSE - BLOCK, that," said the doctor; this is his fifth visit here, and he knew it would be his last. He was always begging me to be at his side when the end came, and by A CURE GUARANTEED good luck I chanced here to-night. "Strange as it may seem to you, this same man was once a king. You smile, but, nevertheless, it is true. He was cast away in the Pacific and reached one of the small islands out there, where he lived and became the ruler of a little kingdom. He longed for white society and abdicated and went back to the sea.

"But that is not what I wanted to speak about," the doctor went on, lighting a fresh cigar. "It's his curious ideas of his ability to come back from the other world. He has talked to me by the hour on this subject until I put him down as a spiritualist of the me to make his presence known on the night of his nativity, June 30, and has excited my cariosity not a little. He was a man of remarkable nerve, was as brave as Cœur de Leon and would be as little daunted by the appearance of a simon-pure ghost as he would by the approach of an old friend. I never cared about saying anything regarding it, for if I have to confess it, for the first time in my life I was a little weak.

"You know the dead-house at Charity hospital and its interior? Well, I had had a case of aneurism that puzaled all of us, and, being a young physcian then. I had a natural pride in my diagnosis, which did not agree with that of the other surgeons. So I determined that when the patient died, as ne was sure to do, I would hold an autopsy myself. Well, the poor fellow specumbed at last, and, as I had been busy all day, I could not get back to the hospital until 11 o'clock on the night of June 30. I remember the date well. We were too used to such things to notice them. In fact, so great was my desire to prove my diagnosis correct as against that of other physicians, I thought only of the case, and nothing else.

"It was anything but a pleasant night. I may say that I cannot remember a more disagreeable one. A blustering norther was blowing and a heavy rain falling. The wind mouned around the caves of the hospital as if hundreds of sufferers were in agony, and the gurgle of water in the gutters leading to the cistern was anything but musical. Once in a while a flash of D. lightning threw out in relief the bodies lying on other tables awaiting burial. Certainly it was a night of nights for a

"it took but a few minutes' smoking to recover my steadiness of hand, and I resumed the work.

"While bending over the body, and just at a moment when the greatest delicacy of operation was required, a curious noise from one corner of the dead-house startled me. It was not like a foot-step, but was somewhat like a shuffling of feet. "Instinctively I looked in that direction, and noticed for the first time some four or five skulls on the floor in great benefit a partial state of preparation. The younger students had been at work preparing them for their cabinets. The grinning faces looked as if to chide me for working on such a night, but then I was too anxious about my case to

"Applying myself again to my sub-ject, I was soon lost in the pecultar derelopments my eye discovered each moment, when I was again annoyed by a distinct sound from the corner. "Glancing in that direction, it must be confessed I was not a little surpried to see one of the skulis moving the uneven, jagged teeth giving a gnastly grin to the mouth. "It is a little difficult for me to tell exactly what were my feelings. That they were peculiar I frankly admit. I fell to studying about the cause of this motion on the part of the skull, and examined closely to see whether or not there was a string attached and student playing one of his pranks.

"But no. In the light I could plainly discern that there was nothing attached to this relic of humanity. Then what moved it?

"Still engrossed with my endeavors to solve this mystery, I did not take my eyes off this skull. "Slowly, stealthily and steadily it brother physician should be have told me of experiencing the slightest feeling of nervousness under similar circumstances. Even the students would have retailed the affair as an indication of my effeminacy had they known it. Surely there were mechanical causes to produce these results. I knew that the unsubstantial could not give motion to the substantial. My natural philosophy told me that there must be a force at work to impel that grim fragment of a human frame toward me. Yet what force was it? "I determined not to leave my seat to attempt a close inspection, fearing to be rewarded by the laughter of those who were endeavoring to astonish me. "The dreary monotone of the rain and the unearthly sobbing of the wind urned my reflections to a more sombre color, and some things came back to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and our native me I had read in Robert Dale Owen's Footprints on the Boundaries of Another World' - curious things,

The rat had entered the cavity in which the brain had been through the foramen magnum or aperture through which the nerve matter of the spinal column communicates with the brain. The skull turned over, imprisoning the body of the creature, and permitted the use of his feet only through this foramen. He could move the skull, but while it was on the floor he could not get his body out. "Pasted across the whitened brow was a slip of , paper, and on it a stu-

"I regretted the intervention of the rat. Had that animal never have been discovered by me there would have been an excellent foundation for a ghost story, on which I could have made my affidavit and thus swelled the number of authenticated cases of remarkable spiritual manifestations.

But the rat spoiled it all.
"Even with the full explanation of the skull's movements the nervous feeling did not pass off for some time, and even now when June 30 comes around I think of Sailor John and his promise, which, however, he has never fulfilled. -N. O. Times-Democrat. Loss and Gain.
