FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—whatever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys; hence To restore these therefore is the only way in which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the Dyspeptic disorders of women; for Malaria, and general troubles, primarily, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

THE IRISH LAND ACT.

In the House of Lords yesterday the Committee, which has for some time had under consideration the provision of the Irish Land Act, made their report. In their opinion the emigration clause has proved a complete failure. Its principles are entirely opposed to the theory and practice of constitutional government, and any attempt to enforce them can only end in disaster and deep discontent. The Land Commission system is also severely criticised. The Commissioners have clearly shown that they are not able to arrive at any settled principle. In the placing of a proper estimate on the value of the land their decisions have not been uniform, and the work, so far as accomplished by them, convinces the Committee that to look for any improvement in the condition of the tenants from any effort of the Commission is hopeless. Rents judicially reduced are much better paid in practice than are those which were declared by the Commissioners as just and equitable. The Committee further state that land in Ireland, under the operation of this Act, has become, as a matter of fact, unsaleable, that no capital is coming into the country; tenants are completely demoralized, and the result of the measure has been to foster fresh agitation. Ultimately, if possible, the already bitter feeling against England and accomplish generally exactly the opposite of what is intended.

"PLEASE DO NOT SWEAR."

The gambling business in Leadville is as openly conducted as the dry goods stores, in fact more so, since the stores do close up once in a while, which is more than can be said of the "tiger dens." Everybody plays, from the small boys who make bets of a quarter each to the man who has "struck it rich" and lays down a pile of twenty-dollar gold pieces on the nix. There are men who have made fortunes at gambling, but they are the dealers. One of the institutions of the kind is Pop Wyman's place. Pop is a burly bald-headed saloon keeper, who would evidently enjoy the reputation of being the worst man in Leadville. He owns one of the largest saloons and gambling dens in the place, and on his windows stained and painted with fictitious scenes to look like a church. Inside he has a large open bible in a prominent place on a stand, and the giant one of the clock bears the inscription in large letters, "Please do not swear."

THE COMO HOLOCAUST.

Forty-Eight Persons Sacrificed in a Show House—Frightful Ending of a Comedy.

News has just reached this city that the little village of Dervio, on the banks of Lake Como, was the scene of a terrible catastrophe, the like of which has not occurred in Italy for many years. A large number of people had flocked into the village from the surrounding districts in connection with some local fete or fair, and various entertainments had been provided for their amusement. Amongst the most popular of these itinerant shows was a puppet-show, or marionette entertainment belonging to one Signor Sartirana. In default of a more suitable building, Sartirana established his show in a house belonging to a farmer, situated just outside the village. The ground floor of this so-called farm house was used as a public house, to which the villagers much resorted, and the first floor consisted of one very large room, at the further end of which Sartirana had set up his marionettes. The principal item in the programme was announced to be a tragedy entitled and this favorite rustic drama attracted to the spot an audience of over [illegible] people, the hall by eight o'clock in the evening being well filled. A small stage had been erected at the end of the room, behind which was piled a quantity of straw, odd pieces of wood and other lumber, which had been found in the room, and which it was too much trouble to carry down stairs. The performance was commenced shortly after eight o'clock, under the personal supervision of Sartirana, assisted by some members of his family, and had reached a point where it was necessary to illustrate the story of the play by the use of Bengal lights. Unfortunately some sparks fell upon the heap of straw before mentioned, and set it on fire. Sartirana, who was himself manipulating the Bengal fire, at once realized the danger, and, without giving a thought to the possible consequences of alarming his audience, yelled out, "Fire, fire!" But the people instead of becoming panic stricken, thought this was simply

"THE MARTYRDOM OF ST. PHILOMENA,"

A SENSATIONAL EPISODE

in the performance, and applauded vigorously. Sartirana's voice, however, had reached the people drinking in the public house downstairs, amongst whom the alarm of fire caused tremendous excitement, which found vent in loud cries and shouts to the people upstairs, towards whom a move was immediately made. Incredible as it may appear, the wretched spectators of the play, notwithstanding the frenzied appeals and warnings of Sartirana, had not yet realized that they were in any danger from fire, as the straw on yet only smouldered. But they took alarm at the yelling and disorder downstairs, and, thinking that a desperate quarrel was going on in which they might become involved, actually threw across the door a large table, which effectually blocked the only exit. Then, and apparently not till then, did their terrible danger become apparent. There was now no mistaking the huge volumes of flame, accompanied by a choking smoke, which leaped towards them from the back of the stage, and an awful panic ensued. Amidst the curses and yells of men, and the shrieks and lamentations of women, a terrible rush was made to the only doorway. But the lay directly in the way of the half-maddened crowd, and before any cool and united attempt could be made to remove the obstacle such a course had been rendered impossible by the fearful crush, and ere long there was piled upon and under and around the table an almost indistinguishable mass of men, women and children. To add to the horror of the scene the fire had meanwhile leaped from the stage along the dry wooden floor of the room, which was now in full flame. Scores who had not become entangled in the fatal crush leaped through the windows on the street below, most of them being thereby more or less injured, either by the fall itself or from being cut by the broken glass, for, in their frantic efforts to escape from the burning room, no attempt seems to have been made to open the windows. One young mother threw her child out of the window, and it was the only creature of the whole audience really to leave, for it alighted without harm on a heap of straw. Assistance had by this time arrived, and efforts were at once directed to subduing the flames. It was speedily found that no one in the room on the first floor could be alive, for the place was full of a dense, choking smoke, in which

BRAVE, UNSKILLED TABLE

NO HUMAN BEING COULD LIVE,

and which would in any case have prevented any attempt at rescue. All the villagers and many countrymen rendered willing help, and by 11 o'clock the fire was got under sufficiently to permit of an entrance being made into the hall. There an awful sight presented itself. In a ghastly pile against the door and the fatal table were found 48 bodies, charred by the terrible heat and flame, almost out of all resemblance to human beings. The work of removal went on all through the night, and morning had broke before this necessary task had been completed. It is understood a Government inquiry will be immediately instituted into the circumstances attending this terrible tragedy, publication of harrowing details of which has caused profound sensation in Rome. Signor Sartirana escaped with slight injuries, and will be able to give important evidence, but his mother and wife are among the victims.

Do You Expect a Cure?

If so, don't delay too long. We have cured hundreds of patients suffering from Consumption, Bronchitis, Laryngitis, Asthma, Catarrh and Catarrhal deafness, who could not have been helped had they delayed one month longer. And we have refused treatment to over 100 cases during the last year who delayed one month too long. By the use of cold inhalations conveyed to the diseased parts by the Spirometer, the wonderful invention of Dr. H. Sawtelle, of Paris, an Aide Surgeon of the French Army, and other proper local and constitutional treatment, we are curing thousands of cases of the above named diseases every year. INTERNATIONAL BOX.

An Infernal Machine That Frightened the British Legation—Examining the Mystery.

The people at the British Legation at Washington were very much alarmed one pleasant afternoon a few weeks ago. A box arrived at the House. It was of a mysterious size, with a double coupling fastening, and with what Mr. Sartrin, the First Secretary, declared to be a decidedly grimy Irish complexion. No letter of advice came with the box, but there was a fear-suggesting label on the cover giving directions as to how the dreadful thing should be opened. The butler notified the First Secretary, who looked at the box, grew pale, withdrew hastily, and, in his turn, notified the Minister. Mr. West also withdrew, and quickly ordered the butler to remove the "beastly thing" into the tennis court, and put it into the middle of the barred space. The box was believed to contain dynamite, and to come from Irish sources. Mr. West grew very nervous, and fortively peeped at the destructive implement from behind the curtain, dodging occasionally as he thought he saw symptoms of explosion. The box was carefully carried to the navy yard, and orders were given that the infernal machine should be opened. A structure was built over the suspect. A hole was left in this armour and a saw was inserted in such a way that the end of the box might be cut off. To this was attached a very long pole. An aged carpenter who had been in the service for 40 years, and who had not much ambition left in him, was selected to work the saw. This old carpenter lay down behind a ridge of earth, and slowly and carefully began to saw. The carpenter sawed carefully on. Suddenly the saw stopped, and it was evident that a wire had been struck. The saw was carefully removed, but the infernal machine did not go off. A rope was fastened to the wires, and still the machine did not go off. Length after length of rope was tied together, and finally a faint pull was given; then a stronger one. Still the thing did not go off. As the Cabinet and Mr. West and Mr. Sanrin were in consultation, a hansom dashed furiously down the street, Mr. Howard and Mr. Charlton, the Second Secretaries of the Legation, were seen inside waving a letter. They drove up to the pale and anxious group. The letter of advice had come; the machine was intended to express juice from sugarcane, and its inventor asked Mr. West to recommend it!

"TAKE ME OUT!"

Thrilling Story of a Witness of the Sunderland Disaster — Saved by Her Crutch.

The following is the statement of Jane Coe, nurse of Mrs. Long, of 6 Wear-street, Hendon, who was one of the children present at the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, at the time of the calamity. Jane, who is aged 11 years, is a cripple from an ankle disease in the right leg, and was in the gallery of the Hall just before the close. Knowing her helplessness she essayed to get out before the crush came, and reached the bottom of the stairs, where she found a man standing, who stated she could not get out until the remainder of those in the gallery had come down. She sat down at the bottom step, and another little girl, who came down being also refused egress, the pair amused themselves. She heard the man shout "This way for prizes," on which there was a rush down the stairs from the gallery, many of the children jumping in their eagerness to get to the prize distributor. The poor child became alarmed at the crush and got into the angle of the wall opposite the door and put up her crutch across the angle to protect herself. She saw some of those who had gone out slipping back again to get fresh prizes, and heard the man at the door shout out, "This will never do." She states that she saw him shove the door to and push the bolt down with his foot. The shutting of the door dammed up the current of children coming down the stairs, and next she recollects hearing a cry for fresh air and to open windows from them on the stairs. She saw a boy fall down and others trip over him, and then saw these pressing down rolling about on top of a mass of struggling children. Her crutch protected her from the crush, and presently she saw a man reaching over the heap and pulling the dead bodies out, and she shouted to him, "Take me out before the dead ones; I'm alive." The man got hold of her, and pulling her crutch down, hauled her out through the doorway, and on reaching the outside of the hall she fainted, but soon one threw some water over her head and she revived. Her aunt, Mrs. Long, then found her and took her home.
