A STEAMER LAST.

The Sir Langhorne Goes Down With Three Hundred Canadian Cats on Board.

On the 10th June, twenty-two men, being a portion of the crew of the New Zealand steamer, were brought to Liverpool in the Allan Royal Mail Steamer, from Canada, and reported the loss of their steamer with a valuable cargo. By the disaster about 200 heads of cattle were also drowned. According to the statement of the post the steamer was bound to Liverpool from Montreal, and at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 1st June she was at Grand Coteau on the western shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and was being driven by the force of the great freshet of water. The boats were ordered to be launched, but whilst this was being carried out one of them was overturned, and the remainder were also overturned. There were three boats were lowered. In the crew of twenty-seven hands took to their places, but by that time, although only two minutes had elapsed since the vessel had been overturned, the sea was rolling over her. The men pulled about for nearly twelve hours in the cold, and with nothing to eat or drink. So unkind was the weather that they had not really time to save their lives. Fortunately, the vessel was not overturned, and the remainder were also overturned. There were three boats were lowered. In the crew of twenty-seven hands took to their places, but by that time, although only two minutes had elapsed since the vessel had been overturned, the sea was rolling over her.
