over the records of the past and thrill the soul with historic lore. We near the ranged and rocky shore with a most respectful feeling. We land with cheery remembrances and upon a peaceful mission. We halt upon the pebbly pathway to contemplate the decaying handwork of a century since, and as we look the scene becomes beautifully impressive. Behind us the waves roll inward and end in surf and spray; before us stand the runs of a fort, touchingly remind ing us of the ultimate wreck of life : beyond us, obscured by an intervening elevation, topped by full foliaged trees, there is music of a martial character. Its echoes come faintly at first, but byand bye they become distinct, and we realize that the elect of a King are "Marching on to War," and that when they cease to march they find a "Wel-
