In Book III of Clement of Alexandria, (Greek) in the most ancient hymn of the Christian Church. It is there, one hundred and fifty years after the Apostle Paul, asserted to be of much earlier origin. It may have been sung by the "disciples" before he ascended to his reward. The following version will give some impression of its spirit:

LETTER FROM BELLEVILLE.
Capt. Nellie and Her Soldiers—Claimed to be Orthodox—in Search of the Barometer.
The readers of the Whig, I presume, are more or less interested in events transpiring outside their own immediate locality. Perhaps I am transgressing the rule of common sense by presenting above, inasmuch as the readers of the Whig are confined to no particular locality. Actual experience has taught me that there are few localities in Ontario where "the first day" is not read by many intelligent persons. My part, without any pre-emption on my part, I will proceed to state a few facts relating to persons and events belonging to Belleville and vicinity.

Bartholomew Binn, the present English "Calcutta," and Marwood's successor as public hangman, has given his initial performance in his new profession.
Bartholomew Binn, the present English "Calcutta," and Marwood's successor as public hangman, has given his initial performance in his new profession. He was the "subject," and the execution took place at Wainworth jail. Binn has been practicing his craft in New York for some time on criminals, and has exhibited great dexterity in handling the ropes, all his operations being performed with confidence and skill. There was no banging. Powell was swung off cleverly and quietly, and the new executioner expressed himself as satisfied with his work. The doctor made an entry amid a score of the wildest enthusiasm, a number of local musicians preceding the procession, who were followed by the strains of "See the Conqueror's Horses." The public sale of Marwood's effects has been concluded. Hundreds of relic-hunters from all parts of England attended, and at times the bidding was very spirited. The scene was a curious one. While the rough elements were well represented in the crowd of buyers, there was also a sprinkling of respectably dressed individuals, who watched the proceedings with great interest and took part in the bidding, after taking considerable trouble to make sure that the auctioneer caught their bids. There was some disappointment expressed that among the articles for sale there were not more ropes, the taste of the crowd appearing to run in that direction. It seems, however, that the deal auctioneer had disposed of the majority of the ropes which had been service on other criminals to his favorite clients. An old ragged man in the crowd, who had been carrying his ropes to and from the execution, said to the last part of Marwood's body and which were taken from his body at death, brought $2. A gentleman in the crowd to whom Marwood had sold two favourite ropes at the auction, said he had bought them for $10, and they were active, being finally knocked down for $200. The sale was very exciting but soon over.

HIS OWN EXECUTOR.
A Well-known Gentleman's Philanthropy and the Commission Granted by one of His Letters.
[Reverend Donor and Executors.]
We published in our local columns yesterday morning a significant letter from a gentleman known personally or by reputation to nearly every person in the land. We have received a number of letters protesting against the use of our columns for such "palpable frauds and misrepresentations," therefore, to avoid any possibility of misunderstanding, we will state the substance of the letter, and the genuineness of its contents, a reporter of this paper was commissioned to ascertain all the possible facts in the matter. Accordingly he visited Clifton Springs, saw the author of the letter, and with the following result:

Dr. Henry Foster, the gentleman in question, is 63 or 64 years of age and has an extremely cordial manner.
He is a well-known and successful physician, and has been for many years in the possession of a large and valuable estate. He is a member of the A.B.C.F.M., the benevolent order of the same name, and is a member of the A.B.C.F.M., the benevolent order of the same name, and is a member of the A.B.C.F.M., the benevolent order of the same name.
