A PRACTICAL SESSION.

Rev. Dr. Greenough preached powerfully from Mark 14: 22-25.

He expounded upon the importance of the secular teacher, upon the effect which teaching has upon the destiny of one's country, and upon the greater work and mission of the religious teacher. All of all occupied the entire hour, having to do with that which affects man, for weak or weak, through all time, and eternity. And the reason of this is that it is to be immortal. He went on to say that Jesus never left the world without presenting to it a truth, to proclaim the truth unto men. At the other stations have departed to their various homes to continue their labours, leaving testimony to the divine and earthly importance of His ministry. The text had reference to the greatest and most predominant ministry the world had ever seen—a ministry that led to a moral reformation which had been and would continue until the world is restored to its original purity. Allusion was then made to John's labours, and to the fact that when His light shone into the world, darkness could not abide it, nor could it bear to be in the presence of the light.

Making New Years Greetings.

The young gentlemen of the city are debating whether they will make their New Year's calls on a small.

A large number have come to the conclusion that it's about time the custom became obsolete.

"There's no fun in it," said one; "if you don't drink or eat in every house the ladies feel annoyed, and just think of the condition of a young fellow who makes his first visits? What a quantity of cake he has to swallow! Of course, bad and indifferent; of raspberry, cherry, custard, port or fifteen other kinds of wine?"

"It's a big question to undertake. Then, you know, a young man can't make all the talk he wants in the course of a year. No one thinks of calling on the ladies he has not seen a dozen times in a year. I am sure the girls will be pleased to have the gossips discontinued."

Mr. McWayne said when quite young he was used to enter the ministry. There were two obstacles: (1) imperfection in the theological language; (2) a sharpness of wit which was not always appreciated.

Mr. McWayne was requested to state (1) his ground for believing that he was called to the ministry; (2) his ground for believing that he was called to the church; (3) his religious training and convictions.
