It is that which binds earth to heaven. The preacher pointed out the many passages in the New Testament which incite us to seek the higher aspects of Christian life. There is a remarkable similarity in the teachings of St. Mark and St. Peter on the subject; but this fact finds some explanation in the circumstance that the former wrote his gospel under the latter's eye, that St. Peter actually dictated it. St. Mark only recalls three of the parables which the Saviour delivered to His disciples, and these deal with the growth and development of certain seed, illustrative of the growth and extent of God's kingdom. Further on St. Peter speaks of that which indicates greater progression and growth in the Christian life. There should be no standing still in religion as in anything else. There can be absolutely no peace and quietness. There must be advancement or decline.
