THE NEGHTINGALE. There is a bird, a plain, brown bird,

When, dewy fresh and still, the night Steals to the waiting world, And the new moon glitters silver bright, And the fluttering winds are furled.

And the deep rose breathes of musk, And there comes a waft of blossoms fair Through the enchanted dusk.

And thrills the heavenly might With a rich and wonderful refrain. A rapture delight.

Sweet-singing in the dark " He has no pride of feathers fine . Unconscious, too, is he,
