There is a wild Canadian land The Saguenay pours out its tidedark tumultuous, savage stream, Whose boiling, raging currents glide With matchless speed and sullen roar Dewnward to ocean's rook-bound shore.

Its fathomiess abyss sweep,

Now o'er granitio ledges deep .

Now o'er a hidden shoal or bar,

So, ever with a pailed huste. The seaboy speeds across its waste. Dark tales, weird tales, of wreck, Of woeful horrors, men relate, Of im immeasurable derths, Of great ships hurried to their fate, Of dangerous rooks, where tempest-tost Brave mes were in vast whirlpools

Within the iron-bound headland's sweep. That guard the portula of the stream, A granite gateway to the deep. Across its rides are shimmering mists, Huge, spectral phantoms, gray and grim, That hang like shadows o'er the cliffs, And over gulch and gorges swim.

Fierce, gushing winds expand their wing Cold as the blasts of Arctic shores; They shake the solid granite walls And the lone pine that o'er them soars he place is like some funeral vault, For all is barren, wild and block, he inky waters duskier still With shadows of the soaring peak.

On either hand two rugged capes. Grim Trinity, Eternity! In savage grandeur as am to frown On sailing ship and weltering sea; Little of verdurous life may cast A smiling boon, across their side Vor birch nor fir may drape the cliff. Or cascade piunge its foamy tide, For all its awful solitude, Boom Nature in her flersest mood ! ISAAO MCLELLAN.
