The gentlemen leaped from their rigs and a procession of uisters and cigara was seen striking towards a red machine to which Messrs. Wilson and champing their bits. The gentlemen composing the party were mostly capitalists, interested in the prosperity of the limestone city. Amongst them were those skilled in the use of implements and recognized as leading agri culturists. A few young business men were also present, and they evinced much interest in the exhibition. Our when asked in Herace Greeley's lan guage "What he knew about mowers?" remarked, "Nothing now, but I will know mower by and bye." The Cadets whe were firing at a target mear by, were asked if they would turn their rifles on the punster. Not having a reason for doing so they declined. After Mr. Cochrane had explained the work ug of the machine-its extreme simplicity. draft and speed-to the shivering mortals a farmer mounted the seat and the machine, with little clatter, got to The case, based upon missing goods work. The grass was withered and only a few inches high, yet it mowed this dewn, leaving the stubble as even and smooth as the surface of an Axmin ster carpet. The grass was in a fright ful condition to cut, in fact the machine hardly get hold of it, but as Mr. Mayer laskin remarked, as he scraped away the grass with his pipe clayed shoes, "It worked well." The general opinion was that the machine was a superior one horse could draw it easily and do capital execution. OUT IN THE STORM. The Belleville Ontario says that on Saturday night the steamer Norseman with a load of cattle and about fifty passengers, left Port Hope harbor for Charlotte, but before she got far the waves rolled very high and the wind increased to a hurricane. The passen gers became alarmed; in fact there were few on board thought that the steamer could live out in such a sea. A few went side a coal shed 70 feet by 140. Stylish Wedding Quifit

The dress worn by Miss Caroline Berryman on the occasion of her wedding in New York to Lerillard Spencer was one to be remembered for its richness and effectiveness, even in these days of almost regal display. She wore, it was said, the lace of three generations of Ler mother's family, so becomingly draped and disposed by the dressmaker's art as to envelop her like a mist in its filmy transparent folds, while her weil, which one of the finest and most delicate po nt, was arranged in heavy plaits over of the city. the top of her head almost in the shape of a small capote, and fastened on one side by a large diamond arrow, the gift of the bridegroom, and on the other by a peacock of brilliants with a crest of rubies, whose long starry tail fell grace fully over the lace. This was the gift of Mr. Lloyd Phoenix, while the necklace large solitaires, with a pendant of sapphires and diamonds, was sent from over the sea by Mr. and Mrs. Spencer, ermons pendant or breech of diamonds, which nearly covered the front the coreage, was the offering of the Princess Vicovaro, formerly Miss Loril lard Spencer. Those costly trifles formbut a small part of the wedding presents, among which diamonds and other precious stones played so conspicuous part that it might almost have been called "a diamond wedding." Among other testeful and original offerings were a large bumblebee from Cot. Isaac Reed made entirely of rubies, emeralds and diamonds, and a finely printed fan, with mountings studded with brilliants,-
