Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alterative Sarsaparilla Dock, Stillingia, and Sandwake, with the Iodides of Potash and Iron, makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and affective. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, and thoroughly builds up and settle the whole system, thus restoring health and vitality. No troublesome disorders or eruptions of the skin are the appearances on the surface of the body that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some vital organ of the system, whose action they destroy, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

LONDON BRIDGE.

Proud and lowly, beggar and lord,
Over the bridge they go,
Rags and velvet flutter and shred,
Poverty, pomp and woe,
Laughing, weeping, hurrying ever,
Hour by hour they crowd along,
While, below, the mighty river
Sings them all a laughing song.

Hurry along, sorrow and song,
All is vanity 'neath the sun
Velvet and rags, so the world wags,
Until the river no more shall run.

Dainty painted, powdered and gay,
Rolled in state by
Rags and tatters, near the way,
Carries a heart as high.
Flowers and dreams from country meadows,
Dust and dirt in city alleys,
Old men creeping with their shadows,
Children with their sunny eyes.

Hurry along, sorrow and song,
All is vanity 'neath the sun
Velvet and rags, so the world wags,
Until the river no more shall run.

Storm and sunshine, peace and strife,
Over the bridge they go,
Floating on in the tide of life,
Whither no man shall know.
Who will miss them there to-morrow,
Waifs that drift to the shade or sun?
Gone away with their songs and sorrow,
Only the river still flows on.

Hurry along, sorrow and song,
All is vanity 'neath the sun,
Velvet and rags, so the world wags,
Until the river no more shall run.

BRIGHTON MURDER.

Capture of the Accused in a Poor Lodging in Stepney—Limping Justice Overtakes Lefroy.

The saying that detection, though it may halt, generally catches up with the evil doer in the end, has been thoroughly exemplified in the case of Lefroy, the alleged murderer of Mr. Gold in the Balcome tunnel. He re sought London as the safest place in which to be hid, and after paying a visit to his sister at the Islington Fever Hospital, probably to get some money, from her, hid himself in a cheap Stepney lodging house. Here, amid the crowds around him in that thronged eastern district, he doubtless hoped to remain quietly till he could beg the means to pay his passage to some foreign land, a thing easily done from that riverside parish, if only a man had the money.

SEEKING SHELTER.

On June 30, two days after his disappearance from Wallington, he betook himself to No. 32 Smith street, Stepney, close to Mile End, a small but decent one story house in a respectable locality. There was but one room vacant in the house, and this he hired at the rate of six shillings a week, he to find his own meals. He gave the name of George Clark, and said he had been recommended by some neighbors, but could not give their names or the number of their house. He had no references, but the plausibility of his manner and his respectable appearance stood him in good stead with the landlady, as well as a promise to pay in advance for the room. This he only partially redeemed at the moment by paying three and sixpence, saying he had spent all his money in coming from Liverpool, but would give her the balance as he did on the following Sunday morning. He represented himself as an engraver and seemed perfectly quiet and well conducted.

A SELF-CONTITUTED RECLUSE.

From the moment that he entered on his tenancy he kept himself completely away from all his fellow lodgers. When he went into another room to his breakfast or his tea he pulled the blind down instantly, and was particularly careful never to allow the blind of his bedroom to be up when he was in it. He was never known to eat any dinner, his noonday meal consisting solely of bread and cheese, nor did he ever ask for anything more, accounting for his abstemiousness on the plea that he was too hot to eat meat. For some days the landlady had no suspicion that anything was wrong with him. It was true he had no luggage, but he said he expected the arrival of his box daily, and the mere act that he did not go out at all save for an hour and a half did not at first strike her as peculiar. But his impecunuosity coupled with his secretiveness, and his asking her to go in a cab into the city to draw his wages caused her to think something was the matter, though no idea of connecting him with the Brighton murderer had ever crossed her brain. She refused to do his errand, saying she must in that case leave the house unprotected, and asked him why he could not go himself. He replied that he had sprained his ankle, and suggested that she might find a young man who would go for him. Subsequently, however, he decided to send

A TELEGRAM FOR HIS WAGES,

and Mrs. Bickers got a friend of hers to take the copy of it to the telegraph office. The copy was written by Lefroy in a feigned hand (being somewhat bold and round), and was as follows: "From G. Clark, 32 Smith Street, Stepney, to S. Steele, at G. T. Hutchinson's, 56 Pressham street, London, E. C.—Please bring me my wages this evening, about eight, without fail. Flour to-morrow, not 38." Mrs. Bickers also noticed on this occasion that he was wearing a coat belonging to another young man who lodged with her, and which he must have got from his young gentleman's bedroom. She did not, however, like to mention the matter to him, but resolved upon communicating with the police. Before doing so, however, she sent her daughter to Mr. Hutchinson's to make enquiries, and there learnt from a fair young man with light beard and curly moustache, that no such person as G. Clark worked there, and that no telegram had been received for anyone of the name of Seele. She at once suspected mischief, and remembering that a person of the same name as Seele, only spelled differently, had given

EVIDENCE AT THE BRIGHTON INQUEST.

she informed the police. Two detectives accordingly came on, and on going into his room they saw at once that Lefroy was before them. To make assurance doubly sure the officers had taken with them a person who knew Lefroy, and who at once identified him. Lefroy said, "I suppose I must admit that I am the man you seek, and I shall say 'Not Guilty.'" He had little or no money and no watch upon him, and was cool and collected. He refused to give up the keys of the bureau in his bedroom. The locks were accordingly forced, and there was found in one of the drawers a quantity of crape hair such as is used for stage make-ups and disguises. The prisoner was brought down in a cab to Scotland-yard, and on the way thither was moody and reticent. He had spent on food nearly the whole of the little money he possessed when he left Islington on the 26th of June. After being properly identified in the detective department he was again placed in a cab and taken to Queen Street police station, and on being

HANDED OVER TO CUSTODY,

he said, "I am very hungry; I have not eaten since Sunday." The inspector sent for some refreshments for him, of which he partook as if he had been without food for some time. He appeared annoyed at being looked at, and shrank from being gazed at, and seemed relieved to be taken to a cell, where a policeman was placed with him for the night. The police would not allow any person to see the prisoner. He has a more determined look than has been ascribed to him, and he had endeavored to change the appearance of his face by having his light whiskers and moustache shaved off, though he had made no other attempt at disguise. He has a haggard and worn look, but preserves a calm demeanour. This demeanour, it may be noticed, he preserved in his lodgings, as, without suspecting him, his landlady spoke once to him with reference to the Brighton murder. She had missed her paper, and thinking he might have it, she went to his room, and in the course of conversation remarked casually, "They have not found the man that did the murder." To this Lefroy answered without hesitation or embarrassment, "No, I don't believe they have."

SITTING BULL.

Sketch of the Career of the Famous Indian Warrior. The "Sioux Napoleon" A Sullen Enemy.

With the surrender of Sitting Bull ends one of the most remarkable careers in Indian history. As a fighter his reputation stands higher than that of the Seminole chief, Billy Bowlegs, who gave General Scott so much trouble in Florida. As a diplomatist he headed the list; as a strategist and commander, he has been styled the Sioux Napoleon. His history begins about 1869. Before that he was a mere "blanket Indian" on the plains. In that year his hatred of the Americans began to be shown, and under the reigns of General Morrow he was charged with a series of depredations. The settlers retaliated, and one of Sitting Bull's warriors was killed. The slaying was apparently atoned for by presents to the relatives of the dead warrior. But Sitting Bull was not really propitiated. He became

A DANGEROUS ENEMY,

and the centre of a large body of Indians, who developed into one of the most dangerous bands upon the plains. The Sioux Chief now refused to live upon a reservation, and went into camp in a wild country on the Yellowstone River, claiming as his all the land along that stream and its tributaries. In 1875 Sitting Bull ordered away some Montana settlers who had built a fort on this ground. As they refused he blockaded them. One of his band being killed by the besieged he retaliated by killing two of the Montana men, thus beginning a war which lasted till the beginning of 1876. Fort Pease, which contained only 97 whites, was blockaded for three months, during which 500 Indians were kept at bay, with a loss of six killed and nine wounded on the side of the defenders of the fort. As starvation threatened them they sent two men, under cover of darkness, to Fort Ellis, whence General Terry sent four companies of cavalry, three of Montana militia, and 100 friendly Crow Indians. Sitting Bull evacuated his position without firing a shot, declaring that his only desire was to rid the country of the white man. These having been removed, the Sioux destroyed Fort Pease, and retired to their camp when against them, and Sitting Bull was ordered to surrender within ten days. This he failed to do, and Generals Crook, Terry and Gibbon were sent to operate against him from three different directions. Gen. Gibbon found him on the Rosebud, but as he had only 600 men to oppose his enemy's 3,000 he kept on the other side of the Yellowstone awaiting reinforcements. Meanwhile Sitting Bull gave battle to General Crook and stopped his advance. Hearing next that General Custer was on the way to attack him, he crossed over to the Little-Big Horn, and encamped in a strong position. Custer gave battle on June 26, 1876, but having been drawn into an ambush was cut off with his entire command after a bloody struggle. Sitting Bull earning for himself the double reputation of a great commander and a merciless savage. From that day to the present

WAR WAS AT ONCE DECLARED

HE HAS BEEN A FUGITIVE.

He escaped to Canada and secured protection and food for a while, occasionally crossing over the lines as necessity forced him. In the end, however, desertion from his band, poverty and scarcity of food reduced him to surrender himself unconditionally to the United States Government, in whose custody he and his men remain. Sitting Bull is said even yet to show a most sullen and, as the officials style it, a most insolent spirit. To the last the Chief and his braves rode their own ponies, and would neither dismount nor shake hands until they had arrived at the place fixed on for their camp.

Little Nigs for Breakfast.

A short time since some negro children living on the place of Major McFarland, near Geneva, were attacked by a monster snake. As was natural under the circumstances the little darkies gave the alarm in quite a demonstrative manner, which attracted the attention of Miss McFarland, living a short distance away. The lady, in a very business-like way, took down the family rifle and repaired to the scene of action. After looking around for the vile intruder he was discovered a short distance up a tree. The lady drew a bead off hand on the monster, when he tumbled to the ground dead. He proved to be a gopher snake, seven feet three and a half inches in length and fourteen inches in girth. It had swallowed a good-sized pig, cleaned up all the chickens in the neighborhood and still further desired to appease its appetite on a mess of little nigs.

A Strange Affair.

On the arrival at New York of the steamship Knickerbocker from Havana on Friday, members of the crew alleged that Engineer Reid had tortured Fireman Krasnich during the voyage and roasted him to death before the fire in the engine room. The engineer was arrested, and denied the story. He said it was a conspiracy against him. The captain said the fireman died a natural death, and he himself threw the body overboard. Two of the crew mutinied, and he put them in irons. There was a plot against the engineer's life, and he directed the latter to shoot the first man who struck him. All the parties were then arrested, pending an investigation.
