1. All would agree with him that the doctrine of predestination, foreordination, or predetermination was absolutely essential. They could no more conceive of God as the creator and moral ruler of the universe leaving man to work out his own destiny on the theory of mere accident than to conceive of an architect beginning to build a house without predetermined plans.

2. It should be distinctly borne in mind that if there is, as there is, a doctrine of predestination, it does not in any way fetter or tie one's liberty. If God put barriers in the way of salvation, which experience proves to be absolutely insuperable, then there would be reason for complaint. Has God done so? Nay, but in the gift of His Son, and in other priceless gifts, He has provided every help and facility that can be conceived for the salvation of human souls. Beware of entertaining a contrary thought of God even for a single moment, because by it we practically say that the sacred purpose of predestination in God's mind stands antagonistic to us. To think that of God would be to indulge a horrid blasphemy, to attribute to the Divine Being that which if formed in a man, would lay him open to a charge of gross hypocrisy and double dealing.

3. If the existence of this doctrine of divine predistination is any argument for helplessness, if it checks our liberty of action even in the direction of the soul's salvation, then by a parity of reasoning, the argument will apply to every day duty for the doctrine affects not merely the spiritual being but every transaction of life. The result will be that men need not take drink for thirst, bread for hunger, rest for weariness, or medicine for sickness, any more than they need repent and believe in Christ for the saving of their souls. On the same theory the farmer need not sow his seed, the merchant need not attend to business, the minister need not preach the gospel, because all these things are decreed from the beginning. Such a theory would overturn the whole fabric of human affairs. But predestination does not affect the freedom of action. How the one fact is reconciled to the other he could not tell. He was only this perfect freedom.

4. That the doctrine of divine predestination whether applied to individuals or nations, is not unconditional; the fulfilment or realization of that decree or appointment is conditional upon the fulfilment of certain terms with which it is connected. If God predestines one to reach a certain end He desires him to use the means leading in that direction. It may be foreordained, for example, that a child recover from sickness, but recovery is made contingent upon the use of remedies. Next year's harvest is predestinated, but yet the farmer has to plough and harrow and sow the seed out of which the harvest is to spring. The history of St. Paul was a striking illustration of the connection of these two things—the decree and the conditions leading up to a realization of it. In Acts xxvii he relates the circumstances of a shipwreck. He had a vision in which this event was predetermined; nothing was to be lost but the ship. When the storm arose, according to the theory of some, those on board should have resorted to absolute do nothingness. Did Paul argue so? No, he entreated the sailors to remain; he called upon the soldiers to exercise their power and compel the sailors to stay with them, saying, "Except these remain we cannot be saved." No miracle was to be wrought; no angel was to interpose. If Paul and those with him were to be saved at all there had to be such conjunctions of wind and tide and human effort and endeavor as ordinarily save men from going to watery graves. Has this no bearing on the graver problem of the soul's salvation or shipwreck? If it were necessary for St. Paul to declare, "Except these obey the ship cannot be saved; much more have we, the ambassadors of Christ, entrusted with the precious treasure of the gospel given to us to preach, to declare to men, so many of whom in the present day have sheltered themselves behind the theory of restricted liberty, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish;" "Except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of God;" "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of Heaven." The scripture was in perfect

HARMONY ON THIS POINT.

Wherever this appointment of the divine will is mentioned reference is made to the means by which the decree is to be carried out. In Ephesians i, it is said that, "He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of His will;" and in the text, "For whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate, etc." All are expressions of the same divine mind, uttered by the same mouthpiece, dealing distinctly with the two aspects of the problem of the soul's salvation, the one divine the other human. He hoped none would be further pursued by this theological phantom, which had done serious injury in the history of the Church. When it arose it should be brought out of obscurity and contemplated in the clear transparent light of reason and scripture, and then doubt would be cleared away just as the mists lift off the mountain's side under the absorbing warmth of the morning sun. He now spoke of what they were predestined to be—"conformed to the image of His Son," to be like Christ. What aim, what destiny, could be worthier of our noblest ambitions? The situation was such as to suggest thoughts of utter hopelessness. It seemed that we might as well tell the timid little bird to soar just as high into the heavens and with as much vigor as the strong-winged eagle; to tell the painter, who is a mere novice an I knows only how to hold a pallet and produce a daub, to rival the art excellences of a Raphael.

A MODEL IS ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY, and if a standard be required, surely the loftier it is the more enthusiasm will it inspire. No human model can possibly avail; nothing short of that embodiment of moral excellence in the Father and Son. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Character, then, is the principal thing. All other things—power, wealth, intellect—have proven by bitter experience to be fleeting, fluctuating, unsatisfying. None of them fill up the deep vacuum in the human soul. Taken in their amplest abundance and poured into the heart's empty place they are like the swirling malstrom which swallows all and still comes the cry out of the devouring vortex, "Give, give!" Likeness of Christ will alone satisfy. Character endures, character satisfies. Character goes with a man wherever he goes, and remains with him, whether good or evil, under all circumstances. What did conformity to the image of Christ mean? With Christ conformity meant the perfect harmony existing between His will and that of His Father, His entire readiness at all cost, under all circumstances, to do and endure what ever was required of him. To do the will of God was the delight of His life; it gave a holy satisfaction which compared with the satisfaction which spread over the whole human frame when the pains of hunger and thirst have been satisfied. "It is my meat and my drink to do the will of my Father which is in Heaven." Such is the rule by which we are to be measured. "Does it seem too high to be reached?" If some think so they are not alone

IN THE SADDENING EXPERIENCE.

There never was a saint of God on earth but was compelled sooner or later to acknowledge his imperfections and failures. But what of that? Shall we give up because perfect success does not attend all our efforts in following the footsteps of Christ? God does not require absolute conformity to the image of his Son, but He does require the will and effort to be conformed. There should be the will to do even what can only be imperfect. This spirit carried into domestic life will tend to cement the relation of husband and wife, to remove the friction which often mars the service rendered in this the oldest and holiest of temples in which God is worshipped. Taken into the home it strengthens the hands of parents in their government and control of children; it strengthens the children in habits of gladsome obedience. Taken into social life is a check upon hasty words, upon ungenerous criticism upon the unhappy tale-bearing which produces alienation and heart burnings. Taken into business it tends to make men just, honest, true, and upright, to be careful to observe the golden rule. These conditions would not be considered easy, but, said he "Quit you like men, be strong." Thorns and flint may be strewn upon your path, piercing the very soul and making the heart bleed, but in the end the door of the Father's house will be found open, and He will be ready to receive you; there the soul can cast aside the travel stained garments, there having beheld Christ afar off, having seen His face as in a glass, darkly and vaguely, you will be changed into the same image, by the same spirit, from glory to glory.

Dr. Sullivan is not a demonstrative speaker. He has a deep sonorous voice and a slow deliberate delivery, which is clearly understood and at the same time holds the attention of his audience. The earnestness and force of his speech are certainly very impressive features.

MUSICAL PORTION.

Both morning and evening Bridwater's service in A was sung very creditably. The solos were taken by Misses S. Burton, Beel, A. Keyes, Reid, Mostyn and Froiland, and Messrs. Trendell and Greenwood. The collections were the largest taken on any former occasion of a similar kind.

"There is something inexpressibly touching in the fallen leaves," sighs an esteemed author. There is, there is, indeed. It's when you slip on one of the articles on a wet morning, and touch the unsympathetic pavement. But there is in reality touching language,—language uttered from the heart, yea, from the depths of the soul, in the many thousands of testimonials and letters (unsolicited) that come from those who once were sufferers from lung diseases, asthma and consumption, and who have used N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir, and have been restored to their wonted health and activity.

Quarter per Citizen Diem.

A friend of the city policemen has been publicly advocating the appointment of the needful detective from the force, instancing the failure of imported officers of that class in the past. This is a very shallow argument, for it sets twelve men up as equal to, if not the superiors of, a world of outsiders, a ridiculous pretence. We trust that the Board of Police Commissioners will secure the very best man their money will procure for the peculiar post, since the best will be none too good just now. But if any one of the police force possesses as good general qualifications as other applicants he should most decidedly have the preference. Beyond that the men in office cannot have a legitimate claim and should not be consulted in the matter.

TOURNALISTIC PROGRESS.

The religious press is more than holding its own in numbers, comparing its growth with that of secular journalism. Since there is no room for common sensation or the daily talk which draws readers in the mission of a church organ, bound down to a rigid morality and a still more rigid adhesion to doctrines and creeds, it is the fortunate lot of the religious journalist that there is always a peg in the world's godly household on which he can hang up his hat and go to work. Every sect covets an organ, apparently. Two new journals reached our table on Saturday, Zion's Day Star, New York, whose mission is to prepare people for the Second Advent; and the Christian Worker, of Owen Sound, published in the interest of the Disciples, one of the many sects finding a lodgement in that town, long noted for its peculiar religious character. The Disciples have over 700,000 of a brotherhood in the United States and the late President Garfield was one of their number. The religious press of Toronto is a powerful element in its journalism, being in the proportion of fourteen distinct papers to twenty one of a society or general character, besides having reached a standard of ability and influence in a few cases that Toronto's leading daily journals may envy.

RAWHIDE JUSTIFICATION.

Capt. Janes, a Port Hope official, is a super sensitive chap who talks of using a rawhide because a local paper has hauled him over the coals in his public capacity. Evidently it is natural for the Captain to blunder, or he would not so openly make an exhibition of himself and threaten illegal and rowdyish things. Then, it is a mistake for this rose water and eau-de-cologne official—this very tender man upon whose feelings ordinary criticism grates, and in whose velvety hand a vulgar rawhide would be singularly out of place—to remain in Canada fretting over the dire insult of newspaper censorship when there are so many countries as yet without a free press. In one of these he could mismanage as he pleased and use his rawhide whenever it suited his lordly fancy. Meanwhile, so long as he remains in Canada, he will be wise to appeal to the courts for legal redress should he merit it. If it is only his noble spirit that is offended he will be still wiser to rein it in, or he may receive far wider criticism than the present and of a more unpleasant order. The Port Hope News expressed the true spirit of journalism in relation to Capt. Janes's case. He has assuredly caught a tartar: "We have not any hankering after a thrashing, nor are we susceptible to raw hide persuasion. All the horse whips or raw-hides in creation cannot change the policy of this journal. When either cajolery or threats serve as a gag on our utterances upon public matters, we will run up the shutters. When this journal can only be published by the grace of Tom, Dick or Harry, or even Capt. Janes, we'll gather up our traps and start for another field."

TORONTO'S SOCIAL TROUBLE.

The social evil has been discussed by the clergymen of Toronto in view of its increase and growing public offensiveness. The reporters, though invited to attend, were expelled without a word of apology except that the majority of the clergy wanted to be alone. And when a clergyman wants his way he don't practice that spirit of resignation upon which he preaches; he simply takes it if he can. Then, secondly, the Rev. E. Ransford made a notable address, disapproving of the stamping out process urged by some of the brethren, and advocating the localizing and minimizing of the evil by licensing houses and arresting the inmates found outside a given radius, putting a speedy end to houses of assignation, which were a thousand-fold worse than the known haunts. He added that if the names of prominent church members, Sunday school teachers, well known married men and others high up in the religious and fashionable world were given to the public, that were known as habitual frequenters of such places, there would be a great lessening of crime. Upon the latter point the Rev. gentleman is sound, since the state of society in that city is deplorable. But we hope we have heard the last of the proposition for licensing such an evil. The idea is an English importation of Mr. Ransford's, and yet if he will glance at a periodical received last week from London he must be convinced thoroughly of its positive failure there, and of the growth of opposition to it through associations bent on obtaining the repeal of the system. It is an abhorrent notion and we are not surprised that the Rev. Mr. Potts and others at the meeting took very strong ground against it. We have a suspicion that the wholesale suppression of bawdy houses in Kingston has had some bad effects on society, to counteract much good done, but licensing would have spread the offence immeasurably. We want none of it in Canada.
