GUITEAU'S CAPRICES.

His Interruptions in Court—A few of His Peculiarities—Habits and Personal Appearance.

In the course of his address to the jury at Washington Scoville said that Guiteau was unsuccessful as a lawyer, and collecting bad debts was his principal business. Whenever he met another lawyer in court he failed.

Here Guiteau interrupted Scoville, saying: "I had a good many cases in court and never was called a fool when a lawyer. I generally gave them as good as I got."

Mr. Scoville continued: "Guiteau was persistent as a debt collector and had a good business."

Guiteau interrupted: "And had also good habits and personal appearance, which brought the business."

"Well, said Mr. Scoville, "he had no bad habits; never smoked, drank or chawed. He once tried a case with Charles Reed, of Chicago, in which Mr. Reed got the impression that he was a little off."

"That is absolutely false," said Guiteau. "I don't want to interfere with your story, but I want to say I never tried a case with Charley Reed in my life. The rest of your story is good and true, and in regard to my peculiarities I understand them; but I want you to know I never was quite a fool when a lawyer, and don't you forget it. Guiteau acted as usher to Moody and Sankey's meetings, and finally lectured on the second advent of Christ, but made no money."

Mr. Scoville then spoke of Guiteau's susceptibility to woman's society, in order to show that affections influenced Guiteau. He seemed to think he could marry any woman he chose to ask.

"That is a lie," interrupted Guiteau.

Scoville cited the case of the lady with $10,000, and said that Guiteau really expected to be the honest husband of an honest woman.

Guiteau interrupted, charging Scoville with intercepting and suppressing his correspondence and lying about it. The scene was quite dramatic, Guiteau asserting in loudest tones, "You are a liar."

A controversy ensued between counsel, Col. Corkhill asserting that Guiteau was acting a part.

Mrs. Dunmore, formerly the wife of Guiteau, now on the way to Washington to testify, told a reporter at Cincinnati that she did not consider Guiteau insane when he was her husband. He never had any other controlling motive from the time he was 18 up to the present day than this feeling of religious duty. He went away at night feeling as though he were going away from the road to heaven, and almost involuntarily he turned back two or three times. Yet he persevered and went to New York.

A FAIR RENT.

Protecting and Providing for the Agriculturists at the Expense of the Other Classes—Socialist Wedge.

(Montreal Star.)

Mr. Justice O'Hagan, of the Irish Land Court, has explained what he understands by a "fair rent." It means one which the tenant can pay, and yet find himself able by reasonable industry to live and thrive. This view of the case will no doubt be highly satisfactory to the tenants; but does it not place them in a somewhat invidious position in regard to other toilers? If the Government undertakes to fix a fair rent, why not also fix fair wages, and define fair wages to be such a rate of remuneration as shall enable an average family, practicing an average carefulness and economy, to live and thrive? All very well it will be said; but how could the Government secure to every man steady employment at fair wages? Precisely; there is the rub. The tenants are on the land, and the Government steps in to secure them fair rents, or in other words a fair margin of profit for their labor—fair wages in fact; but it cannot do as much for mechanics, artisans or any class of day laborers. The latter may reasonably say—That is not fair. If we had not known that the agricultural laborer going to be protected in that fashion we would have rushed to the land. You are creating a really privileged class in age of the world when it was thought privileges were more and more being abolished. You shelter them from the vicissitudes of fortune, from the exactions of capital, from the competition of their fellows and of all other classes; you make them a real aristocracy, and you leave us to fight as best we can against all these evils, intensified as they are in our case by the crises that from time to time devastate the commercial and industrial world." We do not very well see what answer could be made to this statement of the case. It does indeed look as if Mr. Gladstone had introduced the thin edge of the wedge of socialism by taking one class in particular under the protection of the state. What remains to be seen is whether the thing can stop there. Other classes we may be sure will press to have the wedge driven further home, and it will tax all the great statesman's acuteness to show that their demands are unreasonable, if the action taken on behalf of the Irish tenants is to be regarded as reasonable.

LONDON MEETINGS.

Occurrence of Exciting Scenes and Incidents—The Amusing Side of Metropolitan Life.

The Detroit Free Press correspondent says that at the recent Land League meeting in Hyde Park a deputation from Herverton displayed a banner with this villainous device:

Blessed be the hand that slaves to win
The regicidal steel that shall relieve
A nation's sorrow with a tyrant's blood.

I presume, poetically, that's about how Guiteau felt when he shot President Garfield. I doubt if any body of men would be allowed to carry such a motto so conspicuously through any city in the United States. Although an ardent lover of liberty, I would be a tyrant enough to put the bearers and devisers of such a banner in a British bastile.

The kind of irresponsible fanaticism engendered by the wild fire talk at such meetings was well illustrated at this gathering. A man with a wild cheer sprang from the crowd into the Serpentine, swam furiously out to the middle, hung up his arms with a terrible shriek and drowned before the eyes of the gaping thousands. That poor wretch's lunacy might just as easily have taken the form of assassination—and the wonder is that it didn't.

The meeting had its comedy as well as its tragedy. Most of the crowd had shillalahs. These were jauntily carried and not unfrequently used. There was a temporary block of the procession near the entrance of the park. A practical joker put his head over the shoulder of a man with a stick, and yelled at the top of his voice, "To h—ll with Parnell," and immediately decamped. The crowd with a shriek of rage climbed on the unfortunate man with the stick and nearly demolished the innocent leaguer before the British minions in blue coats rescued him.

Another comical incident occurred on the banks of the Serpentine. A cart was improvised as a speakers' stand. Some villian—a friend of the oppressors—kicked the blocks from behind the wheels and the cart began to move towards the lake. The way the chairman and speakers scrambled out of that cart was a sight to see, and the performance was greeted with thunders of applause. A lady—"no longer young"—spoke from one of the platforms. The chairman made some suggestion to her which I did not hear. She suddenly turned on him and cried in a shrill voice, "Don't you fidget me—I'm sure I didn't fidget you when you spoke." The chairman ceased to fidget amidst roars of laughter.

A MOTHER'S TEMPTATION.

Not Desiring to Thieve—What One Will Do When to Extreme Want.

Mrs. Caroline Cuthbert, aged 25, was charged with having stolen a sealskin sacque worth $200 from Mrs. A. B. Ketchum, of No. 182 Hayward street, Brooklyn. She has four children, the youngest a baby. She said she was in a good social position when she was married, and her husband had a fortune. They lived in luxury, and took but little heed of their expenditure. Finally they found themselves close to poverty. Their means steadily grew less, until she was threatened with extreme want. Her husband did not give her anything for her support. She tried to keep the family by giving music lessons, but she could not get enough pupils to support her children. Early this week she called at one house, where, having failed to secure a pupil, she asked for any cast-off clothing that the lady had. Just then Mrs. Ketchum called, and learning of her distress, told her that if she would call at her house the next day she would give her a bundle of clothes. She called, and told her mission to the servant, who handed her a bundle, which she took away. When she reached her home she found that the package contained a seal skin sacque. She said that she thought there had been a mistake made, and was about to return it when she was moved by the pitiful condition of her children to take the sacque to a pawnshop, where she obtained a loan of $30. Mrs. Ketchum said that the woman's story was true as to the arrangement that she should receive a bundle of clothes, and under the circumstances she refused to prosecute her. Mrs. Cuthbert, by advice, entered a plea of guilty, and Judge Fisher suspended sentence. The seal skin sacque, which Mrs. Ketchum recovered, had been wrapped up to be delivered to a carrier's messenger.

Falling Leaves.

"There is something inexpressibly touching in the fallen leaves," sighs an esteemed author. There is, there is, indeed. It's when you slip on one of the articles on a wet morning, and touch the unsympathetic pavement. But there is in reality touching language,—language uttered from the heart, yes, from the depths of the soul, in the many thousands of testimonials and letters (unsolicited) that come from those who once were sufferers from lung diseases, asthma and consumption, and who have used N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir, and have been restored to their wonted health and activity.

JUDGMENT SUMMONS.

A Process of Law About Which Many Know Very Little—Returned to but Twice in Kingston.

After a debtor has refused to pay a debt the simplest way to recover it is a suit in the Division Court. A judgment recovered, if he pays within fourteen days there is an end of it. If he does not the creditor can issue a writ of execution immediately on the close of the two weeks. But if the writ is returned nulla bona, the creditor can issue a judgment summons, which requires the debtor to appear before the judge to answer interrogations as to his financial standing. At this hearing the debtor has a legal right to be heard privately before the judge, so that peculiar circumstances in his commercial or domestic life shall not be given to the public. A debtor who disregards the judgment summons is liable to be committed for contempt of court. In the conduct of the enquiries all sorts of questions are asked the debtor, such as how much of a family there are, what rent he pays, what work he is engaged in, how much wages he gets when at work, what he thinks necessary to keep his family, and, finally, how much money he can pay monthly. There are cases on record where it is known it would take about four years to square up. Sometimes, moved by the debtor's story, the judge orders a dividend of fifty cents a month. Another person with a family and sick wife gets off on payment of $1 a month. In ordinary circumstances, when a man is working at $9 a week, the contribution is $3 or $4 per month. But the average instalments are below this figure. If the debtor then neglects to pay the judge can order imprisonment. Only two men have been sent to gaol in Kingston, one of whom served out his time; the friends of the other paid up next day.

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER.—Its effects are almost instantaneous, affording relief from the most intense pain. It soothes the irritated or inflamed part, and gives rest and quiet to the sufferer. It is eminently the people's friend, and every one should have it with them, or where they can put their hands on it in the dark, if need be.
