SATURDAY EVEN'G, JAN'Y 25, 1879.

The following is Mr. Longfellow's poem, rea-by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmas at the me morial meeting in honour of Bayard Taylor,

The peace of trod was in his looks.

Dead he lay among his books,

Watch o'er Maximillan's tomb,

So those volumes from their shelves

Watched him, silent as themselves.

Ah ' his hand will never more

Turn their storied pages o'er !

Songs of theirs, however sweet

He is gone who was the guest

Gone as travellers haste to leave

Traveller 'in what realms afar,

In what planet, in what star,

Shines the light upon thy face

In what gardens of delight

Rest thy weary feet to night '

Poet ! thou whose latest verse

Was a garland on thy hearse.

In Dea a'ion a life thine own

On the remains of the past

Thou hast sung with organ tone

Blooms the perfect flower, at last

Friends' but yesterday the bells

Rang for thee their last farewells.

And today they tell for thee.

Lying dead among thy books read too well what his fears were.

never, while I live, forget.

"You know, Col. Hastings, I could not have just the estate, for what would poor Jerry have said when he came back !" I thought the woman s head must have been affected by her troubles, and said nothing. "I see you think me deranged, but I knew he was alive all the time." "Why what could have induced you to hink so !"

"I saw him, Col. Hastings. It was n your bungalow at Calcutta, about two care after I had gone back. Late in the evening I heard a footstep outside which strangely affected me. I was lying half saleep, and, staring up in, a drowsy state, I heard a voice at the varandab, and, as I thought, inquiring of my stuped old servant whether I lived there. The steps then turned away. I danted to the case ment, and although the figure was clad in the most extraordinary compound of European and Asiatic garments, I am sure it was Jerry I darted down stairs and rushed out, but he had disappeared. The servant said he was a bad fakir and wished to get in the bungalow, but could or would tell me nothing of what he had said. But I am quite aure it was Jerry.

So I am quite certain he will come back -but you remember that he never was punctual,' she added, with a faint smile. I did not say if Jerry was alive she must have heard of him in some other way ; but I took leave of her, and short'y afterwards returned to India. In 1853 I was appointed to an embassy to Nepaul, a very striking country, governed by a powerful, warlike race. The first minister or vizier of the country met us, as is the Nepan'ex-fasheon, out side of the capital, and we had a very cour cous and gratifying reception. He cas a tail, handsome man, with a flowing black beard, and conversed with me in Person which I spoke fluently. After mr interview, one of the attendants in formed me the vizier wished to see me alone, and he accordingly conducted me to an inner apartment.
