The appointment of a small army of official assignees throughout the country is puzzling to not a few unsophisticated. minds, having in view the certain'y o the promised commercial revival. If all our business men are to be made solvent and happy on the sure foundation of the general prosperity, what need under the sun for these shoals of financial undertakers to wind up and inter insolvent concerns! The thing is preposterous. Why, if half of Sir John's promises are realized the occupation of these men would be gone before they could begin to get settled down to their work. One possible solution for the enigma is that the Chieftain intends by this very fact to enable the country to realize more clearly than it otherwise might do the glorious reality of the better times which are going to follow his own restoration. Still more likely he has found official assigneeships a ready "put off" method of dilenciale the importunity of office-hunin who we bound to have position of some kind no matter how valueless it may prove when they get it.
