Alderman Oliver differed from Mr. Fair in that view. His experience was that farmers standing on Brock and Johnson streets caught the traffic before it reached the market proper, and more often than not had made a clearance long before those standing in the square. He had travelled the Dominion almost from end to end, and in his opinion the city of Kingston afforded better accommodation than any other place he knew of. Looking at the position of the city finances, and supposing the grievances alleged by the gentlemen present on behalf of the county to have any foundation, he could not advocate anything more than the placing of a small platon the weighhouse scales complained of. The farmers seemed to be satisfied; the more they had, the more they seemed to want. They made use of the city to sell their produce, and get the money of the citizens, and then grumbled at the want of accommodation. He was prepared with a by-law to compe farmers, when attending market, to unhitch and remove their teams, so that there need be no risk of a recurrence of the scene of a few days ago. Mesars. Fee and Snook could not agree with the remarks of Alderman Oliver. In their view the interest between citizen and farmer was mutual, and whatever was done, within reasonable bounds, to encourage trade with the city, must be to he advantage of the latter. No one who

Mr. Fair thought Dr. Oliver was much mistaken in the views he took of the relative positions of citizen and farmer. He thought that if anything Kingston was more dependent on the country. There were other markets open to the farmer whose of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country those of a typhoid character, while if taken the country the country that it is appointment. than Kingston; Napanee would gladly give every facility to secure the trade. Take away the agricultural interest and what would become of the city. shipping interest was nothing now; the manufacturing interest was but small; what then but the trade of the country had Kingston to fall back upon! It was nonsense to talk in that way, and his experience was that the farmers were becoming diseatisfied at the apathy of the city in recognizing that mutuality of insecret that unless the citizens roused to the fact that the markel accommodation was inadequate for the requirement seemed to grudge the small amount of extra accommodation asked. The by-law to compel the unhitching and removal of teams could never be carried out. There was not sufficient accommodation near the market for the purpose, and to compel a farmer to travel to the Albion Hotel, or it might be stated Mrs. Grimswatch the waggons while the farmer was away ?
