has never come from a condemned man speech. When he had finished it he ask. ed for a drink, but you know that was enreasonable, and it could not be admitted, for the time fixed for his execution had fully expired, so I placed the cap over his face, and adjusted the repe, when he said, 'I say, the rope fits very tight.' I replied,
'Never mind, it's all for the best, held up your chin,' and he did so at once, so that I could properly fit the rope. 'Goods by all; God bless you,' he kept repeating as I went toward the lever. At this time he had not required any one to support him, but I told one of the warlers to take hold of the back strap. While he stood in this manner on the drop, with the moose around his needs pushed the lever forward; it withdrew the bolt from the forward; it withdrew the bolt from the swinging doors, and Peace's body fell York through the aperture baneath the platform. The drop was exactly nine foor inches. Peace was dead in a mo-meet; he werer moved a floger or a muscle after he fell; so I carried out my promise to do it well and quickly."

I must admit that I was rather sator. ished at the matter of fact, and yet coin-placent way in a bich Mr. Marwood des-cribed the execution, and modestly refer-red to his own dexterity; but I was anxious to know by what method he had obtained such success as an executioner, and endeacored tofglean from him the mysteries of the art. The explanation is explicit, but rather embarrassing. The old system on which Calcraft rested his ples are rapidity and dislocation. When the annexed certificate :-the neck is dislocated the man does not suffer at all; at least that is my opinion. I have no doubt that if you examined Peace you would find the spinal cord knocked off the cap of my knee, and since severed. It is done in this way I attach that time have often suffered with a the rope to the cross-bar; the noose at swelling in the knee joint, caused from the opposite end is formed by a brass twisting the leg. I have used all kinds ring weven in the rope, and this is placed of liniments, as well as medical attendance; on the left side of the neck, towards the but on the last two occasions have used

I am) nut so easily frightened, but find thus dissertation on the science of hanging oppress me. I have a desire to get bide the house; to get into a freer in spicers; I can almost imagine that full t, and that speedily, I shall not speed the long drop myself. Still there is nothing terrible about Mr. Marwood as he recimes in his easy chair and speaks in his soft, pleasant tone of the strange experiences he has gone through.

'I am doing God's work,' he says, 'according to the divine command and the law of the British crown. I do it simply a matter of duty and as a Christian, and I think no more of it than I do of Such is the affable man who executed cace. Conscious that he is doing his gentleman, Calcraft, was breaking down, when a boy was greatly interested in executions, but it is a most singular fact that I never saw an execution until I myself became an executioner, I do my duty with a kind hand and with firmness, and I believe I render a benefit to society. I have been successful in every engage ment, and I am respected wherever I go. I have told you that in Ireland I am known as 'the prince of executioners;' in Soutland I have received the kindest treatnot be better served. In the past seven

I sax in desperation; thinking that perhaps I may surprise him into some expression of feeling. Bless your life, no, he says, smiling. I sleep as soundly as a shild, and am never disturbed by phantoms. Where there is pull there is bad sleeping, but I am not disturbed in the least, for I am The other night I kept in the warder's apartments in Armley Jail, peacefully and undisturbed, although I had superintended the erection of the scaffold, and know

I had to execute Peace in the morning It is a matter of duty with me entirely."
Have all the criminals who have received your attention acted courageously on the scaffold? 'Well,' Marwood replies, 'taking them altogether they are a brave lot. The worst job I ever had was with a Spanhad murdered a man, his wife and three children, and then set the house on fire. He was sontenced to death, and when he me me mader the cell with the straps he fainted, and was saved from falling by three warders. I put the straps upon him, and said, in a loud and authoritative tone: "Stand up, sir." It was only a ham foint. I told him I would not have such nonsense, and he stood up im-mediatuly. With this lesson he walked out and was hanged quietly. Peace, how-ever, gave me no trouble of this kind, but met his fate like a man.

I now ventured to sak the executioner if he was not looked upon with some degree of loathing when he became the successor of Calcraft, and he freely admitted that such was the case. 'I was frequently feared at,' he says, 'at first;' but I put it down to people's ignorance, and now I am received with the greatest kindness whorever my services are needed.'
How does it affect you in your own town I' is the last question I put to Mr.

'Oh,' he replies, 'at Horneastle I am tracked upon se one of the first men in the los. I am tracked well by one and all. Lesceting idleness, I pass my vacant time is business, and work in my abox shop near the church day after day, sutil such time as I am required classwhere. It

I had passed sourly two hours in the coicety of the hangeman when our quiet chat was over. Then I rose and thanked him for his hindness, and bale him these.
