THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER. Where now the autumnal frost the feliage | defeated, selected a 3 year old pappoose, And hardy dahlias blacken on their stalk maffy leaved and fresh and fragrant One solitary flower-a perfect rose

This, full of crimson life as if it had No thought of death, I've watched day after While deep in snows the Rigi Kulm was clad, And deep the snows in clefts of Pilate lay-Grim mount! above the clouds whose sharpdrawn peaks Have long presaged the storm and now

Like ships at sea. St. Gothard's summits burying the Laminite with his head the And toward Tell's chapel all the storied Is dashed with slanted streaks of misty rain, There's not a spot of color or of sheen In the dull landscape save the lonely Rose-Laden the sky, and gray the very snows!

With all of blushes and all tragrance rife, Love's fragile banner to the gale unfurled. Bloom bravely on ! You, live thy little life, () Rose! I would not pluck thee from the Twere sentimental folly that would shed Thy sentient leaves to strew you sodden bed

I am the type of the true poet's thought;

I am the type of the true lover's heart -These words, in melody of perfumes wrought. Like notes of music did the flower impart-'In gray haired age my youth is fresh; I bloom Up to the 'ice and blackness' of the tomb. Thou in the flesh and in my petals I. Are shadows; but a soul is thine and mine.

And love a subtler revelation still. Is far more real than rock-ribbed bill. A few short days, or hours and lam gone. But, linger here last of a happy race, lpto my bosom all thou lookest on I gather up - but clothed in summer' grace And I shall hang forever in my mind, A mystic Rose, unmortally refined

I am a Vision, and a Prophecy !

With spiritual power when I am dust Perchance the list survivor, mone bence, Of men shall be a Poet, and his trust, The perfect flower of manhood, shall resign As I the perfect Rose, of Love divino." William Gibson in Harper's Magazine.

A Maori Dance.

In the evening the natives treated us to A haka, or dance, in honour of the Gover nor. It took place in the carved house I have already speken of, the weird, grotes que carvings of which added to the strangeness of the scene There were about a hundred dancers ranged in five rows, the front one consisting of about twenty young women, gorgeously apparelled in tight-fitting red or white calico bodices, and flaming coloured rugs, worn like kilts. When the Governor entered they greeted him with the most awful noise, shouting, yelling, langhing and in some diabelical way munating the noise of the And that which makes the poet's thought beating of tin cans, the barking of dogs and rapid hand clapping. The dance lasted about an hour; it was curious and as a nevelty amusing, but rather mono t mous. There was but little movement of their feet. It consisted chiefly of sway ing their bodies and arms about, going down on their knees, imitating rowing and gathering crops, slapping their own legs and their neighbors'. The men then 'Yea, these my perfumes shed shall hit thy took the place of the women and went through very similar performances. The whole dance was accompanied by noise that would have put pandemonium to shame. It sounded like a mixture of beating of trays, dogs fighting, gigantic smoring and a very full deep bass rum bling in the throat. At times there seemel to be a kind of rythmic song. interspersed with yells and short, sharp cries of "Hue, hue!" "Ha, ha!" "Pakeka!"
