Mr. Ernest Ingersoll, who has been inestigating the "Ups and Downs in Leadville" in the interest of "Scribner," contributes the result of his labors to the October number of that magazine. Among the numerous anecdotes which he records is the following (the mine referred to in the first being the Dead Man Claim)

It was winter. Scotty had died, and the boys, wanting to give him a right smart of a burial, hired a man for twenty dollars to dig a grave through ten feet of snow and six feet of hard ground. Meanwhile Scotty was stuffed into a snow bank. Nothing was heard of the gravedigger for three days, and the boys, going out to see what had happened to him, found him in a hole which, begun as a grave, proved to be a sixty-ounce mine. The quasi sexton refused to yield, and was not hard pushed, for Scotty was forgotten and staid in the snow-bank till the April sun searched him out, the boys

A Baby Case.

There is rather an odd state of things in Newcastle. A young woman was imprudent enough to become a mother before a wife. After trying in vain to get the reputed father to recognize his claims upon him she left the child at the house of his father, with whom the young man resided. The grandmother repudiated the burden thrown on her, and had the mother arrested and brought before the authorities for child desertion, and the authorities, after the regular examination, geommitted the wicked parent to the Cobourg gaol for the crime. But the baby still remained, and the grandmother, conceiving the Reeve of the municipality to be officially the foster parent of such unwelcome waifs, carried it to the domicile of His Worship and there deposited it. The Reeve, in turn, grew angry on receiving such a gift, and had the grandmother arrested for child desertion, and committed her with the miserable mother for trial. But there is
