The sorry plight in which Sir Francis Hincks now nods himself and the equally sorry plight into which he seems to have brought the affairs of the Consolidated Bank, must give those Tories 'pause who were ever ready to swear by him as a heaven born financier, and as, therefore, incomparably superior as Finance Minister to Sir Richard Cartwright. The ference of an unsophisticated public will be that a man who cannot properly manage the affairs of a single Bank is wonder, then, that the vitally necessary utterly unfit to manipulate the far more colussal and intricate financial affairs of the country. Sir Richard Cartwright was accused of all sorts of audacity and vanity for presuming to deny the superiority of Sir Francis Hincks, but recent Sir Francis was far short of what his policy which was patented to make every Tory admirers esteemet him to be, and before all is over Sir Richard Cartwright will be proven to be infinitely his superior in capacity for finance.

The speeches and replies to addresses so far made by his Excellency Lore . Lorne have been stogularly felicitous and remind the Canadian public of the happy - mood in which all Lord Dufferin's public utterances were conceived and delivered Notably the speech in response to the toast of his bealth by the Merquis at the recent Toronto club dinner was in the happiest possible vein, and bore a strik ing similarity to what it is easy to ima gine his distinguished and elequent pre decessor would have said under similar circumstances. This coincidence is no the result of a studied imitation, but of similar mental temperament and oratori cal address. Lord Lorne may not b the equal of Earl Dufferin in point of al round ability, but he is enough like him in this respect to make him no un worthy successor, and it is quite possible that this fact had a good deal to do in de Serming his selection for the important position he has already given promise of filling so well.

Neither is it likely the there will be any 'walk over' the cours in order to claim the money by one the caramen in the absence of the other The "Hop Bitters Manufacturing Company," which offers the purse, would hard ly get $6,000 worth of advertising out of their speculation unless both men wer on hand and an exciting race really en sued. It is virtually optional then with either oaremen whether to go to Chau tauqua or to leave it alone. Of course both being well the prize is munificent enough to ensure the race, but we doubt whether Hanlan would risk his great reputation in a contest upon which the state of his health would render it un wise for him to enter. Courtney, too, is, report says, far from being well, and would gladly, no doubt, welcome a post ement of the contest. It is getting late in the season now, and all concerned could easily endure the tension of sus pense involved until the beginning of next season found both men in better form, and the fates generally more propitious for the struggle.
