Ald. Allen said the system of one Al derman attacking another night after night, for the part he had taken or was likely to take, was not very gentlemanly or honourable. He gave the Council to understand that he should adopt means, simple means, of stopping these attacks. He felt that a drive had been taken at him, in connection with Grove street, the opening of which he had advocated for ten or twelve years. He distinctly de clared that he was not personally interested in the opening of the road, and that he had been encouraged in the start to advocate the road by promises of free

There was certainly nothing in Sir ohn Macdonald's speech at the Queber banquet to enhance the admiration even of his own party for him. If meaning less platitude and maudin compliment to the living and the dead are charac teristic and worthy of a "foremost states man," then indeed the Tory Chieftain may lay claim to this fictitious title. The whole speech, if we may so dignify such a miserable and aimless jumble, was failure in every sense of the word. Ha so much expectation not been raised in regard to it this would still have been true; but when the public mind was ex cited to expect a big thing the disappoint ment is proportionately increased.
