Mr. James Beatty, the venerable proprietor of the Leader, and who has sat i the Dominion Parliament since Confederation, ought to know something about the Canadian Constitution and parliamentary affairs. In fact, at the John A banquet in Toronto the other night, he told his audience that in the "speech at the opening of the Ontario Legislature, there was nothing which he did not know. And yet in the same speech he soundly berates the Ontario Government | do it again. for not introducing a tariff which shall give greater protection to Canadian manufactures. In our simplicity we laboured under the delusion that the local governments had nothing to do with the tariff but that all matters affecting customs and excise were relogated to the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. This, although generally received as a fact, is, we must conclude, a mistake, and we cheerfully assist in undeceiving the publie on this point, by quoting the authority of one who knows far more than Reform Ministers can put into the Governor's speech, but who seems at the same time to know very little about what the Chieftain put into the Act of Con-

The strength of Sir John's regard for his pocket borough, ex cept as a place to be elected for, is well illustrated by the shabby little act o cancelling this scholarship, and we may add that the chieftain's affection for his constituency is correspondingly reciprocated. THE WHITE FEATHER-A particularly decided difference between the candidates in the Mayoralty contest has been the subject of general ever since the election. That difference, from the first favorable to Mr. Gildersleeve, grew much more marked as the day of battle drew near. During the actual tug of war, when the victory hung in the doubtful balance, the pluck of the combatants was most severely tested, and Mr. McIntyre made traordinary genius, new near the end of his innocent admissions in his declaration speech, of how u equal his oozing cou. rage was to the ordeal. Before the day tyre gave up all for lost, and as he had the peculiar courage to tell the electors on declaration day, he slunk off home under cover of the early twilight, leaving his friends to fight as best they could, for a victory of which his own pusilanimous retreat proved him to be so utterly unworthy. After such a selfwhich had been won without him, reminds one strongly of the "we killed chimney after his wife had killed the bear. It is a capital time for an armis tice, not only as regards the exigencies of the struggle and the necessity for breathing time for both combatants, but in reference to the season of the year as well. The climate at the seat of war would likely insist on a truce of its own, at any rate in so far as all important martial operations are concerned, and the war would drag its slow length inim promise that he would no longer upalong during the winter months without any very decisive result to either side.
