Wheat at Odessa. The New York Produce Exchange Weekly says: "On the 14th ult. twelve steamers had arrived at Odessa, having an aggregate tonnage measurement of 71,560 tons, equal to a carrying capacity for 2,500,000 bushels of wheat. Considerable quantities of grain had been sold at Odessa for Marseilles and England, and the conditions there the vessels were to be ready fifteen days after the final arrangement of the armistice. There were consequently several steamers on their way to Odessa in addition to the twelve that had already arrived there. In addition to the already mentioned stocks of wheat at Odessa and Marseilles, which amounted to 98,000 quarters, equal to 7,875,000 bushels, there is said to be over a million quarters in Azov Sea ports, equal to 8,000,000 bushels, which may be taken to include the quantity available in the immediate vicinity of the districts, the quality of which is at least unsatisfactory to reckon upon as a million quarters, or 8,000,000 bushels, at railway stations ready to be transported to the seaboard."
