Furthermere, the Times believes that Sir John Macdonald is of the same opinion, but that he is prostituting the Protection question, and employing the hollow cry about our struggling industries, for the simple purpess of winning a sufficient number of dupes to his own desperate cause, in order to give him some faint chance of restoration to power. In this connection the compliments of the great English journal to the prince of Canadian corruptionists are of the most dubious nature imaginable. "The worst symptom of the movement in Canada," says the Times, "is that Sir John Macdonald has placed himself at its We do not suppose, for a moment, that he will give it success, but his conduct is much to be regretted in the interest of a regulation that requires eather sareful handling."
