The cartoon of Grip, ot Saturday's date, is perhaps the most pointed of any that has been printed for some time. It represents a scene in the interior of saloon, where several are seated having little social chat, interspersed with liquor. At one table are seated Sir John Macdonald and Dr. Tupper, and the recent "shine" in Parliament seems have heated them again, for clear Four Mile Point to-day without John, raising his clenched hands above his head, exclaims: "Smith is a list. I'll slap his chops. He's a coward, a sure of success in their musical tour liar ! liar ! liar ! liar ! LIAE !" Tupper seems to have caught the inspiration, and waving his hand wildly around his bead he shricks : "Smith is a coward He's a liar, a traitor, a villain, a liar -Buttermilk soda is now one of the liar !! liar !! " An old lady (Tory party) close by, clasps her hands, and rolling her eyes heavenward, sighs : -The great Todleben is a shoemaker's elegant! how clever! how polite But the proprietor of the establishment is not so well satisfied. A NIGHT ATTACK. A Pitched Battle over the Spoils,

The residents of Division street have been entertained upon several Saturday nights of late by street rews of the noisiest kind, and a young man named Scanlan lately was badly beaten in one of them. On this last Saturday night the excitement was repeated in w livelier form. There was the unmistakable advance of cavalry and artillery, followed by infantry on the double in skirmishing order. The artillery halted and faced about, to repel the impetuous attack of the infantry closely in pursuit. There was a hard to hand conflict, and then the infantry were seen to break, and retreat in wild confusion. The artillery followed in pursuit, firing several shots with partial effect, but owing to the darkness and the advantages of cover they were unable to effect any cap- volunteers visiting the city on the Queen's tures, and returned to their own lines laden with re-captured material, and triumphant. This was a very pretty drama for the many near residents, who would is now used as a store room. have enjoyed it heartily were they not treated to a "rude awakening," and had they some knowledge of the plot. As it was they were left in profound mystery throughout the night, and had their choice of conjuring up visions of Fenian attack or of settling down to a conviction of the growth and intensity of party feeling in Kingston. Naturally they felt seriously alarmed Yesterday morning the facts became known. As the young assistants Mr. T. J. Donoghue, grocer, Princess Street, were driving home from his store about twelve o'clock, his waggon was attacked by a parcel of rowdies then spreeing it by the way. They stole where they made another raid on the things, nothing daunted because the bold robbery was being perpetrated in front of cals, abandoned the fight long enough to procure his revolver from the house, were evidently not fast enough to catch up, as the field was not covered by either came up very soon afterwards, but then,
