THE COUNTERS OF DUFFERIN

Dear Lady! when you leave our shore, Thou'lt leave a blank all will deplore ; Yet not for thy high rank alone, But generous kindness ever shown. To all of high or low degree, If worthy of thy courtesy, At princely fete or fancy ball. Which lent such charms to Rideau Hall, And fairly seemed enchanted scene, "The Arabian Nights" surpassed, I ween. The Euchantress—Lady Dufferin— With plays ,hat waked our hopes and fears Provoked our mirth, drew fourth our tears, So true appeared in mimic art The passion that will stir the heart: And when we cease to feel their sway, We ve seen life's brightest, happiest day, Ne matter what the Stoics say. Nor should I fail the facts to state How some enjoyed a vigorous skate. And risked a fall —perchance their fate! For the around was ice and mow, Moved fairy forms with cheeks agrow, And sparkling eyes that in a trice, Dissolved the coldest formal ice, And formed instead a magic spell But what it wrought let others tell, Now parting soon, we'll wish all joy With sale return to Clandeboye; And tho' the Atlantic rolls between, Our hearts will keep the memories green.)

of persons within our borders who might, if they chose, translate historical wrongs into actual warfere. Half the population of Glangarry, I believe, fled to this country, if not from Culloden, at all events from their Highland homes, to avoid the tyranny of him whom they called an usurper, whese descendants now sit upon the throne. (Hear, hear.) Yet where is there to be found a more luyal people in the world than the people of Glengarry! (Hear, hear.) In considering, therefore, the possible occasions on which we may have to rely upon the valour of our gallant troops, I reject with horror from my thoughts the idea that they should ever be called upon to shed the blood of even the most inconsiderate, or irreconcilable of our Irish fellowcountrymen. (Loud cheers.) And gentlemen, if this cloud, or rather phantasmal exhalation, be dispersed along our southern boundary, what is there behind it in that direction but illimitable sunshine, and the prospect of perpetual peace! (Applause.) It is true even so we are still liable to invasion, and to-day we have witnessed how soldier-like and martial is the army of our Southern neighbours. (Laughter.) But if they have forced the bulwarks of our land, if they have penetrated to the heart of our richest city, if they have established themselves within the precincts our camp, it has only been to give us a fresh proof of the kindly feelings entertained for us by themselves and their fellow-coutrymen in the States-(cheers)-perhaps to lay siege to the hearts of our young ladies -(loud applause) - and to join with us in doing honour to our gracious Queen (Hear, hear.) In the name, then, of all those who are present of the volunteer army of Canada, of the people of Canada, I bid them welcome, and inasmuch as it is the habit of every politic Government to extend to deeds of military daring substantial rewards, I hereby promise to every American soldier citizen who is now present, or shall ever after take part in our reviews, a free grant farm within the Arctic circle the day he takes the oath of
