Couriney's Late Victory. When Courtney a fortnight ago played with Den psey all the way up the course, and then suddenly, at the turning stake, found himself entangled in some hidden obstruction, and the next minute shot preeremoniously into the lake, many of his rival's friends claimed substantially that Dempsey was too much for him, and encouraged the idea that this was a ruse of Courtney's to escape defeat. Yesterday at Skaneateles, however, the relative merits of the two were conclusively settled. Courtney not only broke away from his antagonist at once and took a command ng lead, but actually was ahead at the finish by a whole quarter of a mile. This ought to satisfy the most ardent admirer of Dempsey that he has yet no business with a first-class man. It protty effectually removes from the public mind any doubt, if any ever existed, as to whether Courtney stooped at Geneva to any trick, as was imputed to " him Hanlan's second easy work with a whole field of good scullers in Canadayesterday makes it all the more incumbno wish to give an opinion off hand; the ent upon Courtney to leave no stone unturned to win in the great event with Hanlan in September .- N.
