A QUEER CRITICISM.

Under the somewhat extraordinary caption of "Philosophy Extraordinary" our brilliant contemporary, the Belleville Intelligencer, takes us to task for a simple statement of fact, and the derivation therefrom of an indisputable inference which our sapient censor himself uncon actously endorses. We recently referred to a couple of Liberal successes in the mother country, one of which was won by a majority of nearly 3,000 votes, as correst proof that "the Conservative wave had not so completely overswept the Bri tish Islands, as some were trying to make it appear." We further hazarded the statement that an adverse majority of 2,892 was "a sufficient'y decisive defeat for the Tory party of the place," an opinion in which we will warrant Mr. Bowell will himself concur should Mr. O'Flynn defeat him in North Hastings by a majority one tenth as large. There was not one word in the paragraph to which the Opposition organ of the Bay City has taken exception which could be tortured into even the implica. tion that the British constituencies in question had been won from the Tory to the Liberal side, and yet our confrere erects such a little effigy of straw merely for the amusement of knocking it over. It was quite necessary for the organist to refute what we did not say, however, since he coufirms what we did say, by declaring that "the less of one or two seats can make but litt'e difference, except as an indication of public opinion on the particular matter of policy, which may be most prominent at the time." This admission is a mere paraphrase of our claim that "the result of these y elections indicated that the war party would not have all its own way in the event of a general election;" and that it was "an indication to the Government that their policy had not won universal admiration." The fact is there was nothing whatever in what Paul's Church, preached a sermon very we did say to which anybody endowed with even average common sense could take exception, and our contemporary gives a proof that he is not wholly bereft of this desideratum by unwittingly repeating the Wino's reflec. with good." Yet these thousands of men were permitted to stay there for many hours without molestation or protest from Mr. Beaudry, although, so punctiliously did he enforce his proclamation upon others that three or four men, wearing certain distinguishing badges but certainly forming no 'mob' in the smallest sense of that term, were promptly pounced upon, roughly handled and jerked into jail by the minions of the Mayur, who refused bail for their liberstion till the day was over. The vast masses were permitted to stay there and and to act as they listed till their well understood purpose was accomplished, and the Orangemen had surrendered their intended procession.
