Br. Guonos's Socratt .- Monthly Meeting

It looks very little like the condem nation of Hon. Mr. Turcotte by his con stituent, sfor his so-termed political apostacy, when upon his recent return home at the close of the late session, he was welcomed by the Mayor of Three Rivers and a host of his constituents, and conducted to his residence by a procession and every enthusiastic mark of popular approbation. The Hon, gentleman's constituents justly, proudly and gratefully regard him as one of the saviours of his Province from impending bankruptcy and ruis.

The German Socialists, after all, turned but three members to the ne House, but they polled ominously large minorities in very many constituencies where they were defeated. The strength of the communistic element in Germany France, the United States and elsewhere. is simply a demonstration of popular discontent at the hardships which the almost world wide industrial stagnation has entailed upon the labouring classes. With the disar pearance of the commercial depression will also vanish these radical attempts at social revolution.

The "Tory Taxationists" got a rather severe rub from one of our city pulpits yesterday, when the preacher, in an elquent invective against dishonesty and sulogy of strict integrity, declared that rulers who imposed unjust and unnecessary taxation upon a people for the purpose of raising funds to spend in party corruption, were nothing less than pub. lic thieves and robbers. The speaker was animadverting in general terms against the various forms of unpunished theft, and was making no specific reference whatever to the current coutest between political parties when this home thrust was delivered. Unintended as it was to have such an effect, however, the shoe will pinch and pain the Tory corn all the same. The principle laid down was one which no man's common sense can gainsay.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is evid ently a believer in consistency. course it was the very proper custom of the British pulpit to pray for peace when war seemed pending. Now that the danger of conflict is overpast His Grace has issued a request to his clergy to re. turn public thanks for the answer to their prayers in the present assurances of In this as in more secular matters we dare say gratitude is too often a lively sense of favours to come. Thanksgiving for deliverance is not so frequently observed as is the appeal for assistance from a threatened danger. In trouble of any sort human nature cries out for help After obtaining it the escape is marked with a brief spasm of self congratulation. The Archbishop is evidently of the opinion that if peace was worth asking for it is also worth acknowledgement, and hence the injunction to public thanksgiving which he has laid npon his clergy.

The result of the pitched contests be tween danian and Ross has satisfied everybody except the defeated oarsman himself that the Toronto champion is the better man of the two. Ross seems still to have the utmost confidence in his power to cope successfully with his fleet rival. He is, it is stated, to have an opportunity of doing so at a regatta shortly to be held near Barrie. After the vexatious delay for fine weather and smooth water at the recent race greater force will attach to the exof Courtney for a landlocked lake. We question if a more beautiful sheet of water answering this description is to be found on this Continent than Lake Simone. The transparent beauty of this juland lake impresses every visitor to Barrie, and certainly newhere in Canada could rival oarsmen have an opportunity for a fair test of their powers under more favorable circumstances than upon its placed besom, is the neighborhood of Barrie. Situ ated, as our own city is, between lake and river, and supplied with magnificent facilities for aquatic sport, our opinion, above given, will be appreciated as quite a disinterested one by oarsmen and all others conserned in the noble sport in which they are interested.

The Toronto Telegram cited case from across the line which is calculated to enjoin upon Canadian electors the duty of exercising the franchise, and the public danger of abstention from the polls. Some extremely "goody" people have conscientious obligations to mixing in the political melee, and defiling their moral purity by taking any part whatever in political (i.e) in public affairs, Self-outlawed, those high-toned people raise hands of horror at the political iniquities of public men and, refusing to interfere, drift into the maction of the no-party party of whose views we think our independent contemporaries are virtually the exponents Is the case in question the good people abstained from voting, the roughs seized upon their advantage and elected a just enlarged jail bird, Thomas Fountain by name, as their police magistrate. The good people of the place awoke when too late to the realization of the fact that an ex-convict, fresh from his cell, was duly nd firmly installed as their local Fountain of justice. There is a lesson in the incideat which our too respectable electors bould take to heart. That lesson is that if they permit by their inaction the Goverament of this country to fall into unworthy hands, they are to all intents and purposes accessory before the fact to all the public ills which may afterwards ensue from the fatal mistake. The plain duty of every elector, no matter hour good As may be, is to rote for somebody whom he conscientiously believes will support good government.

RELATIVE MAJORITIES

Lord Hartington's resolution of reflection acquisition of Cyprus. As will be seen majority in favour of the Government in such a number is equal to a majority of 55 in a full Dominion Parliament of 206 members. Enormous as the majority is, therefore, it has relatively been frequenty exceeded in the Canadian Parliament by the majority accorded to the Mackensie Government by the representatives of the people. It should be remembered that on the Eastern question the British Government is much stronger than on any other matter of public policy, yet their majority, conceded to be tremendous, 206 members. Take the Government of Canada when it is strongest, as, say, upon its resistance to the taxation of the people's bread and fuel, in favor of which Sir John was supported by only 27 ultra taxationists against 148 incidental protectionists, and it will at once be seen that the Liberal Government of Canada is stronger in the present Parliament than is the triumphant Beaconsfield in the Imperial House. Those who prate about Mr. Mackenzie's weakened following in the existing Parliament must also admit that the present British Premier is in even greater danger, a confession we are not likely to hear from the Canadian reactionists.

"You are doubtless aware that I was lately at St. Catherines, attending the summer meeting of the Fruit Grower's Association of Ontario. I enjoyed it greatly; the trip altogether was of a pleasing character. I went on to Brantford. and the whole way through my circuitous route I saw the earth laden with food for man and beast. Truly, the Lord is good unto us all. I noticed very strikingly that the land along the western shore of Lake Ontario is being exhausted by long years of bad farming. Evident tokens of this meet your eye all along the head of the Lake. Now that a ready market is found, they are going more into fruit growing, large and small, the climate being well adapted for this. The beautiful peach orchards made one, shall I say, a little envious. Well, no. Why should I be ! There is a law of compensation everywhere. They cannot raise our gor-Leous, magnificent, luscious plums. The experience gathered at our Fruit-Growers Association meetings brings out this fact strength."-Montreal Gazette.

A Royal Romance, A writer in the London Figuro de scribes as follows the manner in which Queen Victoria brought Prince Albert to the popping point: Certainly the young Queen thought less of England than of marriage. The Ministers would fain have made her marriage a sort of international treaty. Beyond .. ll doubt Vic toria was the finest match in the world The Queen, however, was full of a host of little projects, ever shifting and changing, like the little heaps of sand the chil dren raise in the garden of the Luxembourg. She told her mother she would wed no one she did not love. The Duchess of Kent repeated the speech to the Ministers, who thought it revolutionary in the extreme. Coronation day came, and the next day the ball at Windsor. Among the dancers was the tall, handsome, slender student from the University of Bonn-her cousin-a Coburg, like herself. The Queen noticed him, and Prince Albert did not return to Bonn. Even had he not loved he would have stayed; and he loved. But his cousin was the Queen! Here the woman had to make the advance. Victoria, deeply touched as she was by his love (which was never more to leave her). could not easily conquer the maiden timidity due to her severe education. Nevertheless, the morning came. assure you I invent nothing. Although the Queen has not consented to relate these delightful incidents, Prince Albert has told them to his friends.

Nevertheless, then, a morning came. They were riding together, he and she, down the great avenue of oaks of Windsor. These caks were young then, but old enough already. After a gallop they found themselves alone. We know how dangerous it is for man and woman to ride together. Suddenly the Queen took a aprig of honeysuckle from her bosom and, stopping, offered it to Prince Albert. Bending to reach it his lips touched the tips of his cousin's gloves. Perhaps it was the fault of the horse. The woods of England and France know well how many lovers the noble brutes have been the cause of. A silence fullowed, more sweet than anything ever sung to the heart of Mozart.

Next morning Prince Albert still wore the honeysuckle in his button-hole. He kept it even when it had faded. A fortnight after that ride the plenipotentiary Minister handed King Leopold of Belgium a tiny letter, closed by an enormous red seal, as though it had a mighty secret at atake. It began, "My Dear Uncle," and was signed, "Victoria."

A month later the Queen announced her intention to marry Prince Albert of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, to her Ministers. She asked their counsel with a pretty air of decision, which caused them to reply with an "unanimous yes." The wedding took place on the 10th of February, 1839. The Queen of England married for love when he told England that the Queen's marriage was the Queen's romance.
